CLAVERIA, Philippines — When up to 100 armed men in military uniforms descend-ed on this small town in the hills of northern Mindanao at noon one Saturday about a year ago, the townspeople were initially apprehen-

The armed men methodically blocked off the streets around the town hall, disarmed the local police there and ransacked the building. But the people's fears quickly dissipated. The raiders took away a few weapons, some typewriters and a police radio, according to residents. Not a shot was fired, and it was all urban poor, especially here on the troubled southern island of Mindanao. poor. We're only fighting the military."

By comparison, the Philippine military had not been so disciplined in Claveria. One unit was withdrawn from the town after residents complained that its soldiers had a habit of firing their guns when drunk, molesting women and getting into hrawls.

The Saturday raid on the Claveria town hall, said one resident, "was good propagan-da for the other side." The "other side" is the New People's Party of the Philippines. For 15 years it has been waging a largely rural guerrilla war against the government of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

But lately the NPA, as the organization is

"The NPA does not confine itself any more to roaming around in the hills and mountains," said one of the organization's political leaders. "Now we go down into the cities."
In fact, displays of force by relatively large groups like the one that swooped into Claveria have become more common since last year, and attacks on police or military targets within city limits have grown more daring sometimes taking place to daylight, According to military and other sources,

New People's Army raids, assassinations and organizing work have been reported this year in the cities of Cagayan de Oro, Butuan, Davao and Digos, to cite a few.

Some of the sources wonder if the increased urban activity on Mindanao could be a dry run for a campaign in metropolitan Manila, which has been suffering some of the worst effects of the current political and economic crisis.

One indication of the New People's Army's growing strength on Mindanao is the main road across the island from Cagayan de Oro to Davao via Butuan and the Agusan prov-inces. Most of its military eheckpoints were ahandoned earlier this year because of repeated insurgent attacks, and revolutionary slogans have been painted on its concrete surface io many places. While the number of New People's Army fighters remains relatively small - an estimated 10,000 armed guerrillas in a notion of 52 million people — the organization's growth has been acknowledged even by Mr.

Marcos. According to the New People's Army's own figures, the group's armed strength has more than doubled since 1980. The group has made huge gains, its underground literature says, since Mr. Marcos declared martial law in 1972, ostensibly to put down a Communist insurrection. At that time, the group says, it had only 600 armed guerrillas nationwide. The New People's Army now says it has 20,000 "full-time and part-time guerrillas"

Scientists Make Plea for Sakharov

WASHINGTON (AP) - A group of 55 Western scientists, including six iii Nobel Prize winners, has offered to trade places with Yelena G. Bonner, wife of the dissident physicist. Andrei D. Sakharov, if that will convince Soviet officials to let ber go abroad for medical help, one of the scientists said Thursday.

Morris Pripstein, a physicist at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory in California, said the offer was made on July 31 in a telegram to President Konstantin U. Chernenko, and was being made public only because the Russians had not responded.

Mr. Pripstein said that under the offer, pairs of volunteers would spend week each in the Soviet Union to serve as "good-faith witnesses" for the Sakharovs. Mr. Sakharov reportedly started a hunger strike on May 2 in an effort to convince the Soviet government to let Mrs. Bonner go abroad for treatment of eye and heart problems.

MOSCOW (AP) — Four Georgians, including a former clergyman and a movie actor, have been sentenced to death in connection with a thwarted hijacking last November in which seven persons were killed. Tass has reported.

The press agency said that a Georgian student had been sent to prison tor 14 years for her role and that an employee of the airport in Tiflis, Georgia, had been given a three-year suspended sentence for failing to prevent the hijackers from carrying weapons abound the plane. A Soviet official said at the time that an armed group had tried to commandeer an Aeroflot plane and have it flown from Tiflis to Turkey.

Soviet sources have said that there were eight would-be hijackers. including one who was killed during a shoot-out on the ground. It was not known what happened to the other two hijackers. The sources and Soviet ... press reports have said some of the group were the children of prominent Georgian intellectuals and Communist Party officials.

U.S. Rocket Launches 3 Satellites CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida (AP) - Satellites from the United States, West Germany and Britain were fired into orbit aboard a Delta rocket Thursday to create and observe artificial clouds and an imitacon comet as they study the solar wind.

Seventy minutes after the launch, the National Aeronaudes and Space Administration reported the rocket had performed well and that the U.S. payload had separated successfully and entered its own orbit. The West-German and British craft are to separate Saturday.

The $78 million project, the first in which satellites from three nations were carried on a single rocket, is one of the most complex scientific satellite missions attempted. U.S. Jaycees Vote to Accept Women TULSA, Oklahoma (AP) — The U.S. Jaycees overwhelmingly approved at a special national meeting Thursday a resolution allowing women full membership.

Until now, membership in the 64-year-old organization has been limited to men between the ages of 18 and 36; women could only be members of Jaycees women's groups. Officials said the age restrictions would remain

The Jaycees had waged a 12-year, $1-million legal fight to bar women from full membership. But the Jaycees' executive committee voted in July to recommend that women be admitted after the U.S. Supreme Court backed on July 3 a challenge by Minnesota Jaycees to the legality of the exclusion of women, contending that the bylaws violated the state's laws prohibiting discrimination in places of public accommodation. the signing of the agreement on Wednesday came after the United States refused to sell Stinger anuaircraft rockets to the Gulf state. A Kuwaiti diplomat in Washington said the Soviet package of surface-to-surface and surface-to-air missiles and other arms would cost

The presence of Salvadoran troops at the camp is a political irritant in Honduras because of an old dispute that led to war between the two nations in 1969 and has been the cause of border clashes in the years since.

But presidents cannot participate in the wisecracking. It will not be tolerated at home and it will out be tolerated abroad.

There is a very good reason for this. Presidents are the ones — the only ones — who are empowered to make the bombs go off. They have the keys and the codes and the authority. And that means, in a horrendous, burdensome sense which perhaps none of the rest of us can understand, that they also have the responsihility. The trade-off here is fairly simple: We respect the responsibility and the burden of those who bear it; we require in return that they respect our sensibilities and our need to know that they are serious.

That understanding is what was violated by the president's hair-raising, microphone-test-ing "joke" about bomhing the Russians the other day. We hate to be so somber about it. but the joke wasn't funny.

The Green Revolution Has Side Effects in Punjab

THE PLATFORM

WASHINGTON - You might Sakharov perhaps to death's door, and his wife conceivably to the door of the Gulag.

What fantastic, unspeakable offenses have they committed to justify their treatment? Ac-W call it a chain of cause and effect. After 18 years the green revolution of India's Punjab has created an identity crisis in Sikhism. In turn, that is feeding the political crisis and the violence that has taken several hundred lives this year alone in oorthern India. At bottom, this has to do with the breakdown of the Sikh caste system. (Caste was outlawed when India gained its independence in 1947, but it endures in practice.) All the dramatis personae of the cootinuing Punjabi crisis — the ex-tremists, the political reformers, the president of India, the generals, even the mutinous soldiers — are upper-caste Sikhs, or Jars. Conspicuously out of sight and out of mind have been lower-caste Sikhs, or Untouchables, now called Harijans, or "chil-dren of God" — the name that Mahatma Gandhi gave them. That Sikhism has caste at all is an anomaly. Its. 16th-century founder," Guru Nanak, wanted to combine the best of Hinduism and Islam into a oew religioo based on human equality and the rejection of caste. The Sikhs' holy scriptures, an anthology of 6,000 hymns, say: "The Hindus are of four castes, but they are all of one seed ... How can one amongst them be high and another low?" Yet history and economic circum-stance produced in the Sikh peasantry a caste system in direct contradiotion to the religious teaching. Io every Punjabi village, landless Sith Hari-jans exchanged their labor in largely subsistence agriculture in return for grain and fodder provided by landowning Sikh Jats. In what was called the jajmani system, the Harijans, di-vided into Chamars (leather workers) sometimes worked side by side with them or just supervised. In village temples, Jats and Harijans worshiped together; outside, discrimination was constant. Harijans could eat at Jat homes only if they squatted subserviently on the ground and humbly took food in their outstretched hands. Jats never ate in a Harijan house, saying it was unclean. Intermarriage between the generally fairer, taller Jats and darker, shorter and Mazhbis (barn cleaners), did

Somehow this economic interdependence, linked to caste, held Sikh villages together. It provided the social order. The scriptures did stress the ideal of sharing, saying in one noted passage: "We reap according to our measure — some for ourselves to keep, some to others to give. O, Nanak, this is the way to truly live."

Hargans was unthinkable

By Richard Critchfield

Then it all came spart. The unraveling began in 1961-62 when, after 30 years of patient research, American scientists persuaded India to grow a new strain of dwarf wheat that had been hred in Mexico.

Within five years this wheat was sown throughout Punjab. Its success proved to be a catalyst for Sikh Punjabi acceptance of many modern sci-entific farming techniques — high-yield, fertilizer-iotensive, fastmaturing new grain, multiple crop-ping and year-round irrigation. Between 1967 and 1983 India nearly quadrupled its wheat production, to 42.5 million tons, Sikhs oow normally produce more than half the grain on the Indian market.

Tractors, combines and electric.

power displaced buman toil. Labor became a enumodity. As production rose the Jats were no longer custombound peasants but modern commercial farmers who carried on agriculture as a business for profit. Jats who failed to change went bankrupt. Harijans, no longer ned to farming, began commuting to jobs in the now-booming Punjabi towns. A com-mon sentiment that I heard was:

Now we're free. The Jats can no longer rule over us and treat us like animals." Caste had lost its economic basis. And the "breadbasket of India" had won economic clout. The Sikhs, 52 percent of the Punjab populace hut only 2 percent of India's, next sought political power; to some this means autonomy, if not outright nationhood. Without interdependence in food production, the serf-sahib relationship shattered like overripe wheat.

Some Harrians abandoned beards and turbans, or set up their own Sikh temples. Having lost faith in Jat pa-ternalism. Hargans turned to New Delhi to protect their rights. This drift to assimilation provoked a Jat reaction. Sikh extremists denied cutreaction. Sikh extremists denied cul-tural change and sought to preserve the old ways by force and violence, partly to keep Harijans in the fold. More thoughtful lats saw the oeed to reform Sikhism from within by giving new stress to the Islamic element in its 16th century origins.

In terms of belief, Sikhism is strictmonotheistic and closer to Islam. But in social practice, as long as caste survived. Sikhs tended to identify with Hinduism. They also observe some Hindu festivals and customs. Belief in karma and the Hindu cycle of birth and death through transmi-gration of the soul is more common among Harijans than among Jats.

If the Jats can restore egalitarianism to Sikhism, they just might set a pattern for the rest of caste-ridden. agriculturally modernizing India.

And Hope Continues for Poor Farmers

WASHINGTON — It was the time of the UN World Food Conference in Rome in November 1974 and everything that could have gone wrong seemed to have gone wrong. There were failed harvests in India, the United States and the Soviet Union. The price of wheat quadru-pled. A world food delicit of 100 million tons was predicted.

The assembled throng heard Henry Kissinger, who had called for the emergency conference, promise to set up a world food council, a wheat agreement and an international buffer stock to avert workdwide famine. One man walking the corridors seemed to have a less alarmist view.

Mootague Yudelman, director of the Agriculture and Rural Develop-ment Department at the World Bank, believed that agriculture was in the midst of a technological revolution and that the small farmers of the Third World could be participants. At that time most conomists still ignored small farmers, leaving them to the anthropologists. Few thought they were flexible or intelligent enough to respond to price incentives or adapt to new technologies.

Mr. Yudehman thought differently.

He was convinced that technology was divisible. He had spent his life arguing against the orthodox view that successful agriculture had to By Jonathan Power lots of capital and economies of scale, Mr. Yudelman had grown up on a big ranch in the Transvaal. As a boy he used to wonder why the white land was so productive and why everyonesaid nothing could be done about the poor farming methods of the black African small-holders nearby. Forty years later he felt he had worked it out. In 1971 Robert McNamara took over the presidency of the World Bank and when the two men met at a conference in Lausanne, Mr. McNamara was persuaded. A yearlater, m Nairobi, Mr. McNamara made his famous speech committing the bank to a totally new direction: The subsistence farmer was to be the focus of the bank's attack on poverty.

Mr. McNamara retired three years ago. Mr. Yudelman is retiring in Sep-tember, and it seems to many inside and outside the World Bank that an important era has come to a close.

These were only two of the people nivolved; hundreds of others played critical roles, not least in the Rockefeller and Ford Foundation-funded agricultural research stations in the Philippines and Mexico that did the basic research on high-productive strains of wheat and rice. But what be on the U.S. model - large farms, provide money, drive, expertise and above all the respectability that new ideas needed if they were to break through into everyday political deci-sion-making in the Third World.

What has changed in the 10 years nee the World Food Conference, while the Third World's population has increased by about a billion? Most important, India and China, who between them account for twothirds of the Third World's population, have shown that they can propopulation growth. Indian agriculture was the success story of the 1970s, and China looks like being the success of the 1980s.

Africa Mr. Yadela an's own conti neat, is the great failure. "We made the mistake of underestimating African administrative weakness and also thinking Africa could adapt Asian methods," he says. The critical factor in Asia was the use of irrigation. Using Africa's rivers for irrigation would be incredibly expensive, and the tube-well revolution of Asia is oot repeatable in Africa, where the water table is so much lower.

All its troubles notwithstanding. Africa is manageable, Mr. Yudelman feels: Its food import requirements are relatively slight. The present drought will not last forever, and Africans are becoming more sober about what has to be done.

Mr. Yudelman says he will walk out of his office feeling even more hopeful than he did in 1974. Then a small public sector was doing all the research. With a lot of money to be made, biotechnology is now the new frontier; breakthroughs are occurring in vaccines, pesticides and, doubtless before long, the introduction of new plant types tolerant to salt water. Optimism does not mean relaxing. Mr. Yudelman concludes. In a year in which Bangladesh, India and Paki-stan have had record harvests; too many countries have a population growth that outpaces food produc-tion; in others the increase is not satisfactorily distributed. Making sure that the food produced is at least modestly shared is still a goal that eludes government, the World Bank and Montague Yudelman. International Herald Tribune

Crowing Parts Ru In Dallas: A Caveat

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON—In a few days VV the Republicans will be run-ning a show from Dallas designed to make television viewers forget the one the Democrats produced last month in San Francisco. Whether the Resean team can liven their convention up remains to be seen. But those who watch are certain to get an overdose of bragging about the exuberant state of the economy and the benefits of the private enterprise system. President Reagan's quick-response stumping in Austin, Texas, after the Democratic convention, supplied a cine to what you will be hearing next week: "Are you better off than you were four years ago? Is America better off? Do you want to go back to the days of America second best?"

It is useful to have at hand the just published "The Reagan Record," a book by the compartisan Urban Insti-tute, edited by John L. Palmer and Isabel V. Sawhill. This study, which was in the works from the first days of the Reagan administration, deals dispessionately with results, as disdispessionately with results, as distinguished from politicking.

First of all, the study credits the study credits the Reagan administration with laying the potential groundwork for stimulating fong-term economic growth—assuming that some way will be found to cope with the federal budget deficits. But it warns that this does not necessarily translate into higher standards of living.

"Ronald Reagan's brand of conservation floids that! government is servatism [holds that] government is the problem, not the solution. However . . if government is not always the solution, neither is it always the problem," the editors write.

The oratory at the Democratic convention suggested that America is in the grip of a 1932-like Depression, which it is oot. The Republicans will probably be giving us another sort of political flummery, emphasizing the progress of the recent recovery without mentioning the recession that preceded it or the staggering prob-lems of debt at home and abroad.

No one in Dallas is likely to bring up the glib promises of 1980; Taxes would be cut, defense spending accelerated, the federal budget balanced, unemployment reduced — and all these goodies "with oo one group Singled out to pay a higher price."

A study released by the Congressional Research Service on July 25 found that the 1981 budget cuts pashed 560,000 persons — including 325,000 children — below the poverty line. A report by the Congressional Budget Office showed that if tax action and budget cuts are considered a together, families under the $10,000 income level will have suffered a net loss of about $19 billion from 1983 to 1985, while households earning over $80,000 will gain $35 billion. A main conclusion of the Urban

Institute's study is that the Reagan administration, which obviously could not achieve simultaneously all of the things it-promised in 1980 hered to five main priorities:

 The huge tax cuts, accompanied by the defense buildup, took prece-dence over balancing the budget.

When it came to parceling out with economic growth, oot equity, in mind." The end result is that the greatest tax benefits were provided to high-income families.

energy policy, production took precework place and the environment.

So whether you are better off depends on who you are. If you are a been solved the upper income brackets, the Reagan administration has been good for you — provided you don't worry world's first large parabout the environment, conservation, to be operated by a conservation of a sister o about the environment of in the lower circ. If you are poor, or in the lower circ. If you are poor, or in the lower income brackets, or a member of a disive diff. half commonity group, the report says, the answer is negative, "at least in part because of Mr. Reagan's policies."

Since 1982, at Management of Mr. Reagan's policies."

domestic budget cuts, the deepest ones were made in programs for the poor and in grants to local and state governments. Middle-class programs like pensions, Medicare and Social Security were barely touched. The tax cuts were designed with accommon growth, oot emitty in to high-income families. • In pursuing deregulation, the administration gave productivity the mod over protection of health, safety, civil rights and the environment. In energy policy, production took precedence over conservation. As "The Reagan Record" points out, these are pretty important basic trade offs. For a rising gross national product last year, America under Ronald Reagan paid a big price in carrier unemployment, a squeeze on the poor and a retreat in the gains that had been made for safety of the work place and the environment.

Pleasurable Company Isn't Enough

Making 'a Farce of His Office'

It was only a joke, of course. But a tasteless joke, certain to have costly consequences on the public diplomacy that the Reagan adminis-tration has been directing to the European allies and the Soviet Union. The gag showed that on the subject of ouclear weapons, as on so many other matters, Ronald Reagan is a thoughtless president.

A serious question is whether the country wants a thoughtful president. Relations with Russia are not the only area where Mr. Reagan makes a farce of his office. The clownish features of the Reagan administration hardly need cataloging. What is worth pondering is why the American people seem so disposed to put up with a joker in the White House.

My own feeling is that the country is off on a new round of unbridled materialism. Greed, never far from the surface in American life, is making another comeback. After the dismal years of Jimmy Carter, many Americans are sick and tired of small-minded preaching about national responsibilities. We want to swing free, and the kind of leader we like is one who makes light of traditional restraints.

In an intimate, off-the-record atmosphere, we could put our feet up on the White House antiques and gain valuable insights about his mood, his reaction time, his hearing, his grasp of issues — all this in-circumstances that would make it possible for Mr. Reagan to safely crack jokes about poverty, cancer

This is tempting. What troubles me is the spread of off-the-recordism — a permicious conspiracy to protect candidates for high office that entices reporters to become insiders and leaves the public outside. • It seems that the networks agreed to make Mr. Reagan's prebroadcast talk off-the-record; were

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR Deploring Reagan's Joke

Regrettably, President Reagan's bomb-the-Russians joke comes at a time when those of us who are working for better relations between East and West, for positive and constructive dialogue and for developing initiatives that will assist in the process of communication and confidence-building are beginning to see results. Taken at face value, the president's words indicate a total lack of sensitivity to or understanding of the needs of the moment. They underscore a widespread conviction in Europe that there is a lack of intent on the part of the present U.S. administration to work scriously for a betterment in relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The American people will soon be electing their next president. Whether we like it or not, we in the NATO. countries of Europe have to accept the winner of their choice as the nonelected leader of the whole Western world. One-Party Rule Dismays Jamaicans

Lively Debate Thrives as Leadership Tries to Stay Responsive

By Joseph B. Treaster

New York Times Service

KINGSTON. Jamaica — For the first time since Jamaicans were granted universal suffrage by the British 40 years ago, only one political party is sitting in Parliament. To the surprise of almost everyone, this has not stifled debate, but seems to have fostered freer and Livelier exchanges than were customary under the traditional twoparty system.

Even so, Jamaicans are not happy with the present situation and say it is only a matter of time before they return to the system they inherited from the British

One thing that is helping to keep the governing Jamaica Labor Party responsive, diplomats and political analysts say, is concern that it not be seen in be ahusing power.

"They know they're going to be held accountable in the oext elec-tion." said Carl Stone, a political sociologist at the University of the West indies. "And they're bending over backwards to accommodate public opinion. They're discussing things more than they would other-

Edward P.G. Seaga

The country found itself with a one-party Parliament in December after Prime Minister Edward P.G. Seaga, riding a wave of popularity after his support for the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada in October, called a quick election and the opposition People's National Party, led by former Prime Minister Michael Manley, refused to partici-

Mr. Manley, who led Jamaica to close ties with Cuba and the Soviet Union in the 1970s, argued that voter registration lists had oot been brought up to date and that both parties had pledged not to call elections before that was done. Six of the 60 seats in the Jamaican Parliament were contested by independents who were easily defeated by candidates from Mr. Seaea's party. In the other 54 constituencies, there was oo opposition, no ballots were cast and Mr. Seaga's colleagues simply took office. No one was pleased.

"Jamaicans like to feel that there is an alternative point of view." Mr. Seaga said. "I, as a Jamaican, feel that way, too.

Immediately after the election. both leaders set about trying to devise new channels of dissent. Having taken the entire House of Representatives in Parliament, Mr. Seaga was entitled to appoint members of his party to all 21 seats in the Senate. Instead, he filled the eight seats constitutionally desigpendents and members of Mr. Manley's party, including a Baptist minister, a farm leader and two university professors.

He also invoked a constitutional provision making it possible for members of the public to participate in parliamentary debate. So far, only three people have at least partly because of burdensome procedures. Statements from the public must be typed and presented for screening and must not run longer than 15 minutes.

For his part, Mr. Manley created a mock Parliament that he called the People's Forum. It consists of 60 members of the People's National Party in the roles of cabinet ministers and members of Parlia-

Mr. Manley, who is 59 and grad-uated from the London School of Economics, said that when Mr. Seaga dominated the Parliament he could ignore the opposition bloc. But, he said, when members of Mr. Seaga's own party "are uptight, he has to take note.

Parliament is in recess for the summer now, although a special session was called Wednesday to deal with voter registration.

The voter registration lists certifying nearly one million voters are expected to be completed in Sep-tember, and Mr. Manley said his party would then begin pressing for oew national elections. His party maintained that the old list contained the names of 100,000 people who had died or emigrated and did not include 150,000 others who recently reached the voting age of 18. Diplomats and political analysts said they believed Mr. Seaga called the elections in December not only because of his post-Grenada inva-sion strength but also because he anticipated that steps he has been taking to improve the economy were going to lead to price increases and widespread discontent responded to the invitation. Nor were further details available from the Defense Ministry or the military chief of staff's office, both of which declined to grant interviews on the subject. According to Communist and other sources, the major problem of the insurgents is a shortage of arms. and there are signs that the organization is putting out feelers abroad in remedy that. Up to now, by most accounts, the insurgency has re-ceived little or no material support from abroad. Instead it has relied chiefly on weapons and supplies captured from the Philippine military in ambushes and raids. "The problem now is supplies," said Nido Nabong, a political officer of one of Mindanao's guerrilla fronts who was captured recently by the military. "If there were more supplies and arms, there would be a bstanual change in the stage" of the guerrilla war, he said. But the New People's Army has already come to the stage where it cannot be wiped out anymore," according to Mr. Nabong, "The chances for revolution are bright."

The main reasons for the New People's Army's growth, government and opposition sources agreed, has been the lack of government services and programs in many rural areas, widespread poverty, persistent proselytizing by unist Party cadres and perceived abuses and injustice at the hands of government forces.

More fundamentally, a private analysis by a member of Mr. Marcos's ruling New Society Movement attributed much of the New People's Army's growth to the centralization of power under Mr. Marcos after martial law was de cruit. clared. The report said a computer analysis of social and economic literature, however, does not give

Mr. Rivera is reportedly a university contemporary of the alleged former chairman of the outlawed party. José Maria Sison, 44, who was captured in 1977. The government has offered a reward of 250,000 pesos [$13,888] for the capture of Mr. Rivera.

The fighters of the New People's Army's fighters, according to Communist literature, are drawn largely from the peasant population.

Both military and opposition sources doubt that most recruits are real Communists, Rather, they say, a variety of motives unrelated to ideology prompt people to join the New People's Army.

Chief among them appear to be land disputes, real or perceived injustices and military abuses.

About 40 percent of the court cases in the Philippines are about land disputes. Prime Minister Cesar Virata said. In many cases, small farmers have been forced to move off land to which they have no title but which they have been cultivating for decades.

"Certain people are more adept in getting titles perfected," Mr. Vir-

They evidently include owners of large agribusiness concerns and persons with high-level government and military connections. According to José Gonzáles, a

The NPA started amhushing the security guards of the company 10 years ago." Other latge corporations came in and drove away settlers, and "the NPA was always available" to exact retribution, Mr.

Gonzáles said. "So in this area a lot of farmers joiced the NPA." he said.

The response of the government was always the same: Send the military," Mr. Gonzáles added. "And the more military you put in an area, the more abuses there will be, and the more abuses there are, the more the NPA is able to re-

There are some indications, however, that despite their current "Robin Hood image," the rebels might behave differently if they took power, said Mr. Gonzales. PROCONTROL P, a system that is decentralized, programmable, adaptable-and proven.

Problem solved

The world's first large power plant to be operated by a comprehensive data bus control system has been in trouble-free service since 1982, at Mannheim in West Germany.

Process events in a power plant housands of signals, com-nands, drives, valves and it ion that comes thick and fast. n such quantities indeed that, with economy the watchword, separate cables carrying infornation in parallel are, so to speak, stretched to the limit.

> PROCONTROL P-Brown Boen's data bus control systemprovides the answer.

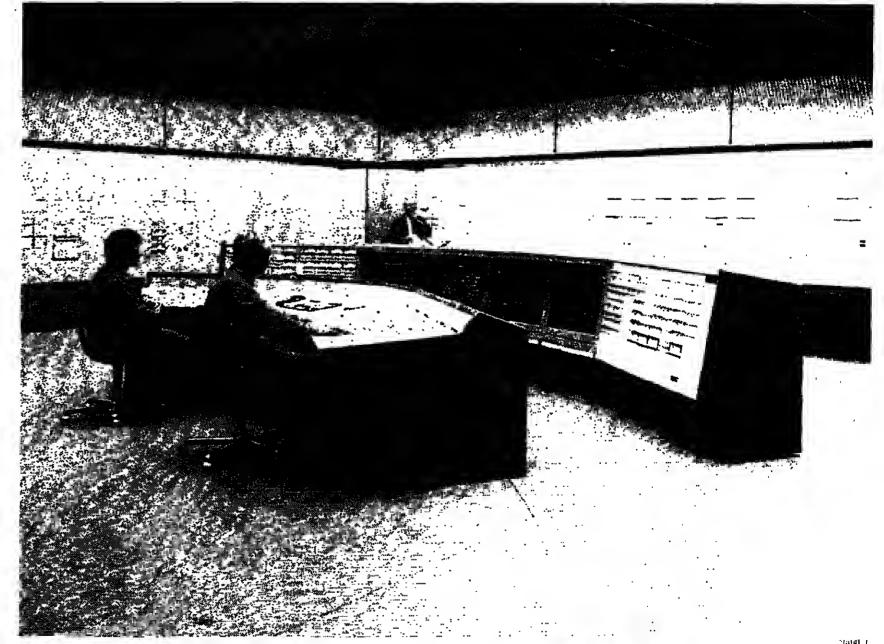

Nith this the data bus carries all he process data, all the time. A ew data bus cables interlink the rarious subsystems controlling different parts of the plant. While programmable microprocesors direct the data traffic. Basically simple but highly sophisticated, and highly effective.

PROCONTROL P can tie in easily with existing, conventional control systems, or it can replace them. It is flexible and adaptable to changing requirements, and to other complex industrial processes.

Systems for four more large power plants are in hand, and ten other stations are partly equipped with PROCONTROL P components.

BBC perform a vital role in providing the world with facilities for generating, distributing and utilizing electricity. And wherever energy needs to be harnessed economically, reliably and safely, BBC engineers are firmly in control.

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York
Stock Exchange rebounded from their worst

M-1 Rose $5.2 Billion setback in a month with a sharp gain Thursday in moderately active trading.

The Dow Jones industrial average climbed 10.16 to 1,209.14. It plunged 15.13 Wednesday, its worst loss since skidding 18.33 July 11. The The Dow Jones industrial average climbed 10.16 to 1,209.14. It plunged 15.13 Wednesday, its worst loss since skidding 18.33 July 11. The Dow recently climbed more than 130 points in less than three weeks.

Advances led declines by a ratio of 5 to 3. Volume totaled 93.6 million shares, up from 91.9 million Wednesday.

NEW TORK—The basic measure of cash in circulation and available for spending in the United States rose $5.2 billion in the week that caded Aug. 8, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York said Thursday.

The Fed said the basic money supply, known as M-1, rose to a seasonally adjusted average of $547.3 billion, from $542.1 billion the previous 91.9 million Wednesday.

Prices spurted during the third hour of trad-ing on rumors that the Federal Reserve might cut the discount rate, which it charges member banks for loans. But most analysts discounted the speculation.

"I think the discount-rate rumor is hogwash, with federal funds trading at 11% percent," said Peter Furniss of Shearson Lehman/American Express. "I don't think the Fed wants to show it is leading the market in an election year."

After the market closed, the Fed reported 8 $5.2-billion increase in the basic U.S. money supply, which will keep pressure on interest Earlier, Mr. Furniss said: "As we get further into this quarter. I think the sideliners are going to be forced to do something if the Dow hangs sbove 1,180. Unfortunately, in an environmen like this, rumors crop up." Some investors were encouraged that housing starts declined 6.6 percent in July and huilding permits dropped 11.1 percent, which could take some of the pressure off interest rates. Also,

Financial Corp. of America, which lost 3% the previous two sessions, was the most active NYSE-listed issue, off % to 4% with a block of 8 million shares at 4¼. The company had to restate second-quarter earnings to show a $107.5-million loss instead of a $31.1-million profit, and has said its American Savings &

Loan unit has liquidity problems.

American Express, of which Financial Corp. of America holds 4.9 percent, lost % to 30%.

Hewlett-Packard was the second most active issue, off 1% to 39%. The company reported third-quarter earnings of 52 cents a share, up from 35 cents a year earlier.

WE WERE RIGHT: MOST

"EXPERTS" WERE WRONG....

In the summer of 1982 while the DOW was drooping under 800, while the Media was crammed with bearish articles on the economy, with BARRON'S writing (August 9, 1982), that "the market seems to be saying it's seen the future and it doesn't work", C.G.R. researchers were lonely Bulls, predicting at the time that tha DJI WILL TOUCH 1,000 BEFORE

The basic premise of our investment philosophy is that of the contrarian, the belief in tomorrow is Dawn not Dusk, the ability to perceive what tha "Crowd" rarely senses, the thesis that one should buy into weakness and Sell into strength.

On July 26 1984 C.G.R. commented: "Last week the DOW closed down 12 points to 1109 catalyzed by the plunga in I.T. & T., which plummeted from $ 30 to $ 22 after tha company cut its dividend. The dip in the DOW offers prescient investors rare opportunities to hoard quality entities that have been discarded by novitiates and institutions who "know the price of everything and tha value of nothing" to quote Oscar Wilde.

We ended our July 26th editorial stating..." THIS REMAINS A CLASSIC TIME TO BUY, NOTTO SIGH: A THEME WE INITIALLY ADVOCATED DURING THE MARKET'S 1982 MALAISE, A MALAISE THAT INFECTED RATIONAL FISCAL BEHAVIOR. THE MARKET SUBSEQUENTLY ERUPTED ON THE UPSIDE. IT WILL ERUPT AGAIN, VAPORIZING PROPHETS OF DOOM".

Our optimism then and now is predicated upon myriad factors, prime of

Our optimism then and now is predicated upon myriad factors, prime of which is a bellef in a "revolution of rising expectations", a revolution that will spiral mankind beyond despair. Within 6 days after our July 26th editorial appeared, the Bull rampaged, with the DOW escalating 87 points to close at 202. Once again, the law of contrary reason prevailed. And now? The DJI WILL CATAPULT TO 1500 OR MORE DESPITE SHARP INTERIM DIPS. Since late 1981, C.G.R. has made 273 "buy" recommendations, all but 14 advanced. We also focused upon "short sales", bloated stocks, which we punctured whan the equities were mesmerizing the "Street", 92% of our "short sales" ultimately sagged, among them APPLE COMPUTER which we categorized as a "Lemon" at $56, or COMMODORE which C.D.R. "dissected" around $57. Current prices? APPLE $26, COMMODORE $25. Current prices? DORE $ 25. Our forthcoming letter reviews corporations which may vault to prominence as did prior "special situations" which gained 400% or more, In addition, we feature a "classic" short sale, a stock that could collapse 50% in a brief time span.

RE RIGHT: MOST "WERE WRONG

Switching to the Kitchen as a New Career

by Nancy Jenkins

EW YORK - In the last sik months, Linwood McManus hasfinally begun to realize a pipe dream that he shares with countless others. Since February, he has been the proud if somewhat harried owner of the Cafe Calypso in Boston's historic South End.

He is also the wine buyer, personnel man ager, occasional headwaiter and full-time chief cook. True, he has a bottle washer and a few kitchen and dining-room helpers, but most of the burdens of the 55-seat restauran fall on McManus's own shoulders. He wouldn't have it any other way.

"I live like a pauper now," he said. "All my savings, all my investments, have gone into the restaurant. I agonized over this for eight years before I went ahead and did it." Would he go back to his former business wouldn't change what I'm do-ing now for any-thing." McManus thing," McManus said. "There's a time to fish and a time to cut bait. I cut bait for years. Now I'm fish-He is not alone.

More and more people in the United States, it seems, are turning a lifelong in-terest in wine, food and cooking into new careers that frequently have little or nothing to do with what went before. What they seem to have in common is the feeling that they have been cut off from dealings with the real world, a world of things and relations with other people, rather than the machines and abstract ideas with which they had been dealing.

Some of them bave become famous, like Barry Wine, once a Wall Street lawyer and now the chef-owner of the Quilted Giraffe in New York, and Sally and John Darr of La Tulipe in Greenwich Village, she a former textile designer and he a schoolmaster. Some are still struggling with unforeseen prob-lems, and a few have given up and gone back to their former jobs.

Some, like McManus, or Joel Wolfe, an actor, or Harvey Edwards, a former physical education director, bave opened restaurants. Peter Kump, a former speed-reading teacher, and Mary Risley, a former investment banker, are running cooking schools and classes. Carlo Middione, once a community-relations specialist for the San Francisco Redevelopment Agency, runs a catering and takeout shop. Frederic Grant, once a high-level management consultant, has gone into cattle ranching in Connecticut. Cattle ranching?

"I was attracted to the impossibility of the task," Grant said recently by telephone from his farm. Grant, 43, raises what be calls "natural" beef without drugs, hormones or antibiotics. At his farm he maintains a research herd of 48 registered Herefords, and he also supervises 1,800 other animals in New York and New England.

"There's a general belief that you cannot profitably raise natural beef," Grant said. and that if it is natural it won't be worth chewing. I set out to challenge all that." Cuts of Grant's beef have been tested and shown to have a 10th of the amount of fat of average market beef, be said. Why does a person whose last project was

by John Vinocur

ERSEY - A small, nice place just off the Normandy coast, Jersey sells itself as the spot having the most sunshine in the British Isles. It tells the French it has a year-round "microclimate" (as if Jersey had worked out some exclusive representational deal on blue sky in the English Channel), and it tells them too that it is both olde and quaynt, a shopper's paradise, able to turn the purchase of a bottle of Scotch minus the value-added tax into a moment of ecstatic tremblings, mild tachycardia. Pitching to the British, Jersey goes over the same ground as bargain-basement-in-the-sun, but insists that the island, while loyal to the crown, is also quite Continental, Frenchy. Eat a snail, bu escape to watch Benny Hill on the botel telly. O.K. Do you remember the part in "Casablanca" where somebody, a Vichy cop, I think, asks Bogart why he was there? His answer was "for the waters," and when he is told there aren't any, Bogart says something like, "I was misinformed." After four days on Jersey, we encountered a phenomenon of note. The sun came out, and the island, its beaches, the flowers leaped up at us, like some ailing body throwing off a shroud. the BBC refers to as "bright patches," a momentary lightening of the beavens from cinder to pearl gray, it seems, but a subtlety mostly lost on meteorological provincials for whom clouds mean clouds.

So, in a sense we were misinformed about Jersey. We had a marvelous time visiting the most enjoyable zoo I've seen, staying at an excellent hotel, driving around and getting lost on the back roads, inspecting some ter-rific-looking but temporarily useless beaches and looking at castles and old Nazi fortifica-tions (the Channel Islands were the only part of the United Kingdom occupied by the Germans in World War II); but it was not exactly what the brochures had said, with their different messages to different chents.

I will not dispute the findings of the individuals with stopwarches clocking the Jersey sun, but the truth is, the next time I heard about the island after flying home was a radio report announcing that Jersey was fog-bound and inaccessible by plane or boat. I won't say either that there are no bargains on Jersey, just that shopping and prices are more interesting in Paris or London. The point is this: The reason for going to Jersey is that it is mild, pretty, relaxing, rather interesting and a bit of a change. That's a worthwhile combination, and one in no need of canbroidery.

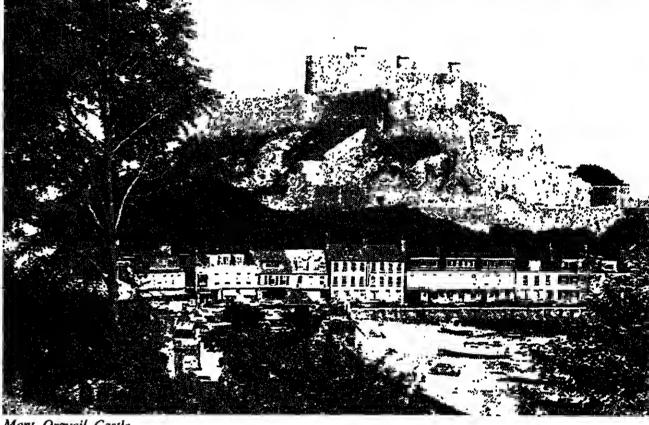

Jersey is weekend-size, about nine miles by five (15 kilometers by 8), and though much closer geographically to France than England, it bas been linked to Britain since 1066. The connection with New Jersey is that Sir George Carteret, a hotshot New World real estate developer in the 17th century, was the island's governor before he went West.

For intrigue, I settled for the changing Jersey landscapes and vegetation. The variations are sometimes sudden, even spectacular. In the north, there are sharp cliffs at the sea, waves that suap and strong winds. In the south, the beaches are flatter, softer, and the water runs to green and purple. But because the roads are really country lanes in most places, and driving is done slowly and with caution, Jersey seems much larger than it is. That's nice: little trips become excursions, with the continuous possibility of getting lost, which is fine, too, since you are never far from anywhere The 200, which is the headquarters of the Jersey Wildlife Preservation Trust and known locally as the Jersey Zoological Park. in a real sense justifies the trip. It was set up by Gerald Durrell on just over 20 acres (8 ectares) with the idea of bringing some of the world's rarest animals to a place where they could breed in protected surroundings. If some zoos have the red-brick weight of turn-of-the-century prisons, and their animals the look of lifers, the Jersey zoo is a

Tools for Tackling Tangles in Language and Literature

ONDON - Born in Britain, Norman Moss was taken in 1939 to New York, where he attended P.S. 6, Bronx Science and Riverdale Country schools and put in a year at Hamilton College. Returning to London as a teenager, he acquired a nickname, Tex, and modest same for being bilingual.

The fact that he is still fluent in both

Until then, three hours before our flight home, what we had seen of the sun was what

British and American English has aided Moss as a journalist and author and has enabled him to produce a confident "British/American Dictionary," published in London by Hutchinson Paperbacks.

Like Mobère's Monsieur Jourdain, who did not realize he was speaking prose, many of us will not know that we are speaking American when we use such words as aisle or loreign service or that we are speaking British when we refer to an aerial instead of an antenna, blinkers instead of blinders and a jumble, rather than a rummage, sale.

Not that just reading a dictionary insures that one is fluent in a foreign tongue. Perus-ing Moss's first dictionary, published in 1973, an English reviewer proclaimed in illusory American, "I'm happy to flack for this book from the boondocks to the Big Apple to plug it from the sticks to the smokes."

Moss, a tall, rumpled man with an impeccable mid-Atlantic accent, says he compiled his dictionary because he needed one. "I'm not that bilingual," he says. "I get mixed up. And I certainly get out of date."

Some of his words are old-fashioned indeed (BMOC, bobby sox). Others, such as the American bodacious, are extremely obscure (it means extraordinary, outrageous and comes from a comic strip called "Snuffy Smith"). When it comes to foods, some of the definitions need shaking up. The American dessert called a betty is described as "a pudding open at the bottom" while a blueberry is "an edible North American berry, resembling a red berry only blue in color."

Moss is better at pointing out serious areas of confusion. In the United States entertainment industry, to bomb is to fail while in Britain it is to succeed. To enjoin is to forbid, usually by court order, in the United States, while in Britain it is to compel by law or urge strongly. A British doughout has jam or ream, rather than a hole, in its middle.

Moss has helplessly watched Americans order corned beef in Britain and has listened lo an American student at Cambridge describe how he elimbed over a locked gate and tore his pants. "But how," asked a monolingual English student, "could you tear your pants without tearing your trousers?"

If things are bad for Yanks and Limeys, they are even worse for those whose native language is neither British or American. A Japanese scholar named Katsuei Yamagugishi has translated Moss's pocket dictionary into a mighty tome. To define a phrase like he has two strikes against him he explained the entire game of baseball," Moss says.

Largely because of relevision, the two languages are moving closer together, but there will always be basic differences. One is the American bahit of making everything into a verb, a tendency Moss says has been around for a long time. "To host a party or author a book or to fund something this is characteristic of American and always has been. Thomas Jefferson was baited by a British magazine for using the verb belittle. There is no such word, they said, this is a bastard word coined out of the perfectly legitimate adjective, little."

Early English colonists began almost at once to pick up words from other settlers such as the Dutch (who gave Americans the word "dumb" in the sense of stupid rather than mute) and the French, who contribute chowder, levee and brave in the sense of Indian brave. By the time Noah Webster published his first American dictionary in 1789, he predicted that the American language would become "as different from the future language of England as the modern Dutch, Danish and Swedish are from the German or from each other." Webster's prediction was wrong because he did not foresee that the two countries would be bound by ever-improving means of communication. Still, Norman Moss says, the two languages are different: Nothing irritates him more than to hear

American referred to as a dialect of English. Some standard American words are English words that are obsolete in the old country. "The American closet is one, gotten as the past participle of the verb to get is another." Moss says. "Galluses, for suspenders or braces, is actually old English slang, a joke on the word gallows that has been out of use for 200 years or so. Tardy is American but it is an old English word like closet - an educated Englishman would know what it

Each language is changing Moss says.

American is adopting words from minority (the black bad meaning good) and drug cultures; the British are using criminal slang (bent for corrupt). And a middle- or even upper-class Englishman will now flaunt the word chatzpah although otherwise unacquainted with the Yiddish language.

Americans use fewer words than the British, Moss says, but they are more exposed to new sources of language, such as computers, which bave given us interface and dump on. And then there are American vogue words. I was once stringing for Newsday and they said send us any story as long as you use the word lifestyle," Moss says.

Americans are more influenced by journalistic bype. "Americans are very excited by the media, so they tend to use overheated words to give the impression of exciting activity to something which is not really active—like somebody will fire off a letter, grab some lunch or hit the boss for a raise. I actually heard somebody say I'm going to

The other day in a British newspaper Moss saw the noun bankroll used as a verb in the headline of a respected British newspaper. "Momentarily in England still means what it originally meant in America as well. which is for a moment. Now it is also coming to mean in a moment. The American billion is becoming accepted in England." The British billion is traditionally one million million or one thousand times as much as an American billion.

The traffic in new words is mostly one way, from the United States to Britain. "The British haven't lost words but what's happening is that they've largely ceased to pro-duce their own colloquialisms and their own neologisms," Moss says, American speech is often flabbier and more abstract than English but as Mark Twain wrote some years ago, it should not be put down as inferior:

The King's English is not the King's. It's a joint stock company, and Americans own most of the sbares," Twain wrote. The point is well taken, though Americans might find it bodacious and Britons a bit much.

by Colin Campbell

WO decades ago, when a few schol-ars in the United States and Europe began applying computers to the study of literature, many of their colleagues reacted with skepticism, be-musement and dismay.

What would the machines do? Count angels in Milion? Measure Hemingway's sentences? That kind of scholarship, a lot of humanists believed, was dreary enough when done slowly and without computers. Would mathematical profiles of style determine if St. Paul wrote the Epistles, or if Thomas More wrote one of Shakespeare's plays? Several ambitious computerized studies along these lines proved extremely con-

Over the last few years, though, scholars have been using computers in ever-widening fields within the world of letters, and respect for the work is growing.

They do not claim to bave made any startling discoveries lately. In fact, they tend to agree that of all the literary endeavors to which computers have been applied, machines remain least influential in highly complicated tasks of the sort that first intrigued experimentalists and appalled the literati.

such as the close study of literary style. Yet computers have grown popular in a wide variety of relatively mechanical tasks. From etymology to bibliography, from the analysis of words in foreign languages to the manipulation of texts, computers have made significant changes in research methods.

Computerized concordances bave all but consigned the handmade variety to oblivion, scholars say. Computerized indexes are gaining, and lexicographers, etymologists and intellectual historians have begun searching computerized texts to help answer such questions as bow the French word for democracy evolved over centuries of usage.

Nearly all of ancient Greek, from Homer to the sixth century A.D., is now available on computer tape, and it can be manipulated with computer programs that elucidate grammar and perform other analytic tasks.

Computer-aided studies still amount to a small fraction of literary scholarship. Yet the popularity of small computers seems to be encouraging academic acceptance.

"It was kind of Quixotic at first," said Dr. Peter Batke about the campus reputation of Duke University's Computerization of Language Oriented Enterprises project "Everybody said, 'Humanities computing?' Gimme a break.' But they've come around,"

said Batke, who runs the project's technical

Batke said the project won friends at Duke, originally a Methodist school, when it produced a computerized concordance to the hymns of Methodism's founder, John Wesley, in one semester instead of in years.

Computerized literary studies are an international field. Last April, 120 experts from Israel, Taiwan, Singapore, Western Europe and the United States gathered at Louvainta-Neuve in Belgium for a conference of the Association of Literary and Linguistic Computing a mainly European group.

Participants delivered papers on a com-puter study of royal English legal charters, on the new French dictionary being pro-duced in France with the aid of some 1,700 computerized French texts dating back to the 17th century, and on computerized sry-lisuc studies of William Blake, Thomas Carlyle, Emile Zola and Andre Gide.

For years, a band of computer scholars has been counting words, measuring sen-tence length, figuring the ratios of unique words to common words and quantifying literature in dozens of similar ways. The field is known as computer stylistics and, according to the scholar who spoke in Belgium on the development of Carlyle's style - Robert L. Oakman, a professor at the University of South Carolina - there are important elements of style, such as Carlyle's penchant for Germanic syntax, that computers spot faster than readers. People are always asking me, 'So what?" " said Dr. Louis T. Milic, a professor of English at Cleveland State University who has devoted years to the quantification of 18th-century English literature. But Milic has stuck to his computer measurements. Asked about noncomputerized critics, Mi-

lic asserted, "Most literary criticism of style has been pretty subjective, intuitive impressionistic and essentially not of much use."

Few specialists in computer stylistics sound as radical as Milic, but they all defend the potential value of their research.

An area of literature where computers are being used with more than average enthusiasm is in the study of religious texts. Apari from the concordance to Wesley, huge quantities of Mormon theological materials are being recorded and manipulated by computer scientists in Utah, and at the University of Pennsylvania a group of scholars under the direction of Robert Kraft, professor of religious studies, is computerizing the early Greek translation of the Old Testament restaurant — except that in the middle of the dining room is a suchi ber. The Scikoyen is an addition to the burgeoning list of Japanese restaurants in Manhattan. But unlike their predecessors, whose selling point was the exotic, the Japanese restaurants opening up now here are making a specialty of healthy food. The only exotic touch is the artistic presentation. The restaurants offer not only the traditional raw fish, sashimi and such, and such typical Japanese home cuisine such as negina, rolled beef with scallion, but French couvelle cuisine with a Japanese touch, a dash of soy sauce or horseradish.

Sushi is already a household word. One New York physician says be goes to a sushi bar at least onice a week; a Wall Street executive includes her favorite Japanese resturant in her list of business lunch locations. "A friend first introduced me to a sushi bar and I instantly liked all the raw fish," says Marianne Bernstein, a photographer.

Marilee Hardley, co-author of "The Yup-pie Handbook," says that a tuna sashini lunch is favored by the Yuppies, or young urban professionals. The babyboomers, she says, are health-conscious and art-loving, and the Japanese diet, natural and low in

THE PERSON AND ADDRESS OF THE

On average, a new Japanese restaurant crops up in Manhattan at the rate of one a month. With the impact of Japanese products - watches, cameras, stereo sets and automobiles - at a high mark, the image of Japanese food has gone along for the ride. The relatively high prices at Japanese restaurants add snob appeal, attracting the fashion-conscious.

HE Japanese food fad doesn't stop at restaurants, however. Asians have used the family grocery store as an entry point into the American economy. Alongside the apple sauce, they stock canned, bottled, dried Japanese food and coodiments, as well as Japanese vegetables such as daikon (long radishes) and negi (long green onion), Chain supermarkets sell dried oriental-style noodles, fresh bean sprouts and tofu, as increasing numbers of amateur che's experiment with Japanese cuisine.

It'may have started with food, but the Japanese impact is seen in other areas of New York life and culture. In cramped Manhattan studio apartments with little room for beds, many young people have adopted the futon, the Japanese cotton quilt. During the day, New Yorkers tend to fold the futon and make it into a couch, which means that the cotton absorbs moisture and dust. They might do well to remember that the Japanese hang out their finton every sunny day, beat it with a stick to dust it, and keep it in a closet during the daytime. Ikebana, Japanese flower arrangement, has also been appearing in New York homes.

The bold, creative arrangement of flowers and trees in a uniquely designed vase matches today's high-tech and simple apartments.

The most "in" pers are Aktia dogs, big intelligent beasts raised in northern Japan. Jogging with an Akita has become fashionable and one store in Greenwich Village sells only Akites. And when it comes to clothes, Japanese influence has been phenomenal. The characteristic wide sleeves, deep, kimono style V-neck, and linear cut have been in fashion for some time. A more recent vogue in East Village is antique monpe, traditional working pants made of blue-and-white cotton with conni ticktacktoe patterns. Working womenappreciate their comfort and fit-all-size con-

Japanese influence also reaches to health care. The Manhattan telephone directory, lists 14 shintsu parlors offering finger-pres sure massage from a trained masseur. The treatment was first developed in China centuries ago, but most parlors in Manhattan are run by Iapanese. One dressmaker in Solio tried chiatsu for neck and shoulder. pain and now goes every week, "I don't know anything more relaxing," she says. And then one bot afternoon at the 34th.

helping to reorganize senatorial offices in Washington become a cattle farmer? Grant remembers childhood summers visiting his grandparents on a Michigan farm, an experi-ence that instilled an interest in food and farming. Like many others who have made the switch to food-oriented careers, he thought about the idea for a long time before he was able to do anything about it. But sometimes the career switch is more dramatic. "On my 30th birthday I took a look at myself," said Mary Risley, now 43. "I was an investment banker with Hambrecht & Quist in San Francisco, but it oo longer held any fascination for me. I thought what I really want to be is a food consultant," she said, langhing at her own lack of realism. "I wanted Gourmet magazine to pay my way round the world." Drawing on a lifelong interest in food, she set off for European cooking schools before returning to San Francisco, where she opened Tante Marie's Cooking School. Now she supervises 20 teachers and between 85 and 100 students a week, both amateurs and professionals.

Jerrie Strom is a cooking teacher, food writer and consultant in Rancho Santa Fe. California. Food and cooking have always been vital interests for me," she said. "I grew up on a farm in Minnesota, and I knew what good food tasted like."

At the age of 42. Strom started two companies, one a temporary personnel service, the other a data processing company that eventually employed 2,500 women and 500 men. "The companies were very successful," she said. "Seven years later they were bought by another company and that freed me for cooking."

Now 63, she gives private cooking lessons in her home, teaches at a cooking school in nearby San Diego, writes about food for a local magazine and local weekly newspaper and is chairman of the San Diego regional center of the American Institute of Wine and Food. This summer, she is giving Chinese cooking lessons on the liner Norway.

In her spare time, Strom travels widely throughout China, Mexico and Europe, seeking new ideas, recipes and techniques. "I still say I'm retired when people ask," she Guggenheim Museum (tel: said, laughing. "I still say food is just a

McManus, the Boston café owner, had cherished the dream of owning and cooking in his own restaurant for years, ever since he first went to eat at a restaurant run by the cooking teacher Madeleine Kamman in a Boston suburb.

"I made 2 lot more money in the label business," he said, "but this is my real love, my passion. I've put everything I have on the ine. I'm 45 years old, and I'm only going to

"Passion" and "love" are words that spring easily to the lips of people who have made the change to food careers. I went to France three different times before I married," said Harvey Edwards, who, with his French wife, Michèle, runs Café du Bec Fin in Old Greenwich, Connecticut, "I fell in love with it, and with French food. It's the respect, the discipline, the effort they put into it."

Edwards, 44, gave up a 10-year career as director of physical education at a YMCA to spend a year in Paris, studying cooking and working in two restaurant kitchens. He returned home to start a takeout and catering business, and six years later, when the space Carlo Middione.

became available, he and his wife opened their French-style bistro.

Five years ago Joel Wolfe, 48, turned from acting to open Lisanne Restaurant on Atlantic Avenue in Brooklyn. "I'd been an actor for 20 years." he said, "and somewhere in the middle of all that came the restaurant fantasy. I've since learned a lot of other people share that dream." Wolfe said he started cooking when he was first married. "It was around the time that Julia Child was starting on TV," he explained. "That was essentially the way I learned to cook. I don't think cooking is an art, but it demands the same ssion as an art does."

It also demands time. Fourteen and 16bour days are not uncommon, even for Barry Wine, who says he and his wife, Susan, are involved in the Quilted Giraffe "often from 8:30 in the morning until 1:30 the next

That kind of schedule is just too demanding for some. Peter N. Edwards, 32, now of Barrington, Rhode Island, worked as a computer programmer for a Boston insurance company while he studied cooking with Madeleine Kamman. Then he gave up the computer business entirely to become a full-time restangant chef, but has since gone back to data processing for a bank.

"You're working 14 hours a day, but you're preoccupied with it 24 hours a day,". he said of his four years as a chef in North Carolina and Massachusetts. "I'm not sure I'm cut out for that kind of work," he said, though he keeps a hand in, working parttime as a private cook. "It takes a lot of commitment, a lot of desire, a lot of persis-tence," he said. "Besides, I had a daughter I almost hadn't seen for a year." "It's blue-collar work for the most part," said Peter Kump, 46, who left his position as national director of education for Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics, the network of speed-reading schools, to become a cooking teacher. As director of Peter Kump's New York Cooking School, he supervises 60 to 80 students a week, including 10 who are in an ntensive preprofessional training program. Many of those who have succe made the switch have had some professional training, but others have leaped in gamely with little more than a love of food and a sense of commitment.

What kind of advice, McManus was asked, would he give people who want to make the switch? "I'd toss them an apron and say: 'Come on, do it! You're only going this way once."" Unlike most of the others, Carlo Middione, owner of Vivande, Porta Via, a combined cafe, catering and retail shop in San Francisco, actually came back to food after a long career in urban redevelopment.

My father was a chef with his own restaurant," Middione, 50 explained, "and I was his apprentice for 11 years. When I was 21, I decided I never wanted to cook again, ever, There are days when I wish I could go back to my office at Redevelopment. But there are other days that are just wonderful. And everyone who loves what they're doing has to expect frustrating days now and then."

"But if I die with a lot of dough," he said, laughing, "it's going to be pasta dough."

Britain Rescues The Dryden House

by R.W. Apple Jr.

ORETON PINKNEY, England—From the road it looks ordinary enough: an old manor house, oo great rarity in the lanes and byways of the English Midlands, in a hodgepodge of styles and of materials: Tudor brick, yellow ironstone, tan brick, gray fieldstone, bits of wood, stucco. It looks, indeed, like what it was, the family home of prosperous, though never wildly rich, country people.

But Canons Ashby, tucked away near the hamlet of Moreton Pinkney in an obscure corner of Northamptonshire, between BBC antennae at Daventry and George Washing-ton's ancestral home at Sulgrave Manor, is much more special than it looks. It is special because of who lived there, what they left behind and the way in which it has been Built in the 1550s, extended in 1619 and .1632 and rebuilt between 1708 and 1710, Canous Ashby was for more than four centu-ries the home of the Dryden family, whose most eminent member was John Dryden, the poet and dramatist (1631-1700). It has escaped the changing tastes of the last 250 years. But after World War II the Drydens left for Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe), and they and their tenants found that they lacked snything like the money to rehabili-tate the rapidly decaying structure. It seemed likely that the house would survive only as a romantic ruin set in wheat fields and woodlands, a reminder of the impact of inheritance taxes on the British gentry.

The logical caretaker for the place was the National Trust, which has restored and watches over hundreds of the gems of Britain's architectural heritage as well as vast tracts of unspoiled landscape. But the trust cannot accept huildings without endowments to finance their upkeep - to do so would simply transfer properties from one cash-strapped landlord to another—and the Drydens had no money with which to create an endowment.

Fortunately, the problem reached a critical state just when the British government, slarmed by the threat to notable buildings all over the country following the sale of Mentmore, the elaborate Rothschild (later Rosebery) estate, and the dispersal of its contents in 1977, decided to help by establishing the National Heritage Memorial Fund. The trust agreed to accept the house and the fund agreed to provide most of the roughly $3.5 million needed for restoration and endowment. The first house saved by the fund, it opened to the public this month, along with a second, Belton House, in Lincolnshire.

For the modern-day visitor Canons Ashby offers lessons in scale and in period anthen-ticity that are lacking in many grander and more famous houses. It feels old, both because it has been possible to save or to buy back much of the original furniture and because the restoration of walls, floors and ceilings has been so punctilions.

The architect in charge, Rodney Melville of nearby Learnington Spa, said his goals had been "to stay the hand wherever possible and not to show we've ever been here."

He has succeeded so well in maintaining a worn, mellow, lovingly preserved atmo-sphere that it is difficult to believe that the Drydens did oot move out a few months ago and that the house is not as they left it, except for an musually thorough spring housecleaning. The National Trust plans to preserve the illusion by strictly limiting the number of people who can enter the house at any one time.

Bot an illusion it is. The panel painting over the chimneypiece in the hall, showing cannons and muskets and drums, was a black smudge when the trust took over; the

drawing-room ceilings and walls were crumbling.

To the most casual visitor it is evident that the drawing room is a masterpiece, dominated by a massive, multicolored neoclassical fireplace in marble and marbleized wood and a fantastically decorated domed plaster ceiling with a magnificent pendant boss at its center, all matched nowhere in Britain.

Three years ago the fireplace was covered with paint, which had to be lifted off with scalpels, flake by flake. It took three men 10 weeks to do it. To save the ceiling the room had to be taken apart; it is now held together by reinforced concrete and steel beams and trusses, all painstakingly hidden from view, that replace timbers reduced to powder by death-watch beetles and dry rot.

Once again the visitor standing beneath it —a successor to Edmund Spenser and John Dryden (he lived nearby) and Samuel Rich-ardson, who called often to see the scholarly squires of Canons Ashby — feels like "Alice inside Queen Elizabeth's jewel box."

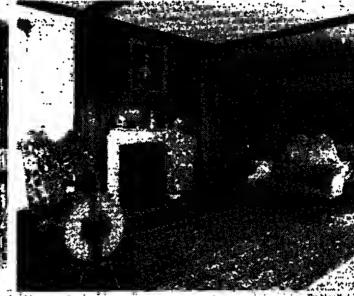

Almost every room has something distinctive. The walls of the winter parlor are cov-arms, rebuses and other devices, including early Masonic symbols, from the 1590s. The painted parlor has Baroque trompe l'oeil pilasters, capitals and friezes that are so convincing that the fluting on the "pilasters" looks real even from a foot away. One room contains extremely rare grisaille murals, dis-covered during the restoration, depicting episodes like those in "The Faerie Queene." And the tapestry room has six occilework chairs and a matching firescreen and settee that had been sold to pay inheritance taxes in the 1930s and which, almost miraculously. came back onto the market last year and were repurchased. The original upholstery bill from 1716 survives among the Dryden papers, as do thousands of other household records, which make Canons Ashby one of the best-documented properties owned by the trust.

Canons Ashby is open Wednesdays through Sundays from 1 to 6 P.M. from April 1 to Oct. 31. Admission is £3 ($4.00); children are

by James M. Johnson

LOP down nearly anyone from vir-tually anywhere in the Western world on the middle of Tuscany and chances are he will know instantly where he is. From the Middle Ages forward generations of painters have depicted the contours and colors of the landscape, mak-ing it so familiar that for natives and foreigners alike Tuscany is the most "Italian" of Italy's regions.

The landscape in a Renaissance painting of the Florentine or Sienese School and the landscape glimpsed from the car or train window today are so similar that it is reasonable to ask if anything has changed in the last half-millennium.

The answer is not easy, for Tuscans are conservative by nature and when they change or make changes they go to great lengths to conceal it from themselves as well from everyone else. They worked out a mo-dus vivendi with their environment and among themselves 500 years ago and, since it fits them perfectly, they see no reason to alter the arrangement

This goes also for their food and drink. Red wine — or nero (black) — for the men, white for the women, all made locally, of course, soups, bread, certain vegetables pre-pared in certain fashions and much spitroasted and grilled meats. That's it, day in and day out. While it may be good, and it is, t tends to be mocotocous and unimagina-

To the Tuscan, however, it's the only sensible fare, and heaven help anyone who suggests alternatives. A restaurateur who had enjoyed great success in Milan, with the exception of an ill-fated, aothentic Indian restaurant, tried his hand in the Chianti district. He fell flat. The Milanese were oot ready for curry but the Tuscans were not even prepared for Milan.

That Tuscans consider a Genoan a foreigner is no surprise, once it is understood that the Volterrans harbor deep suspicions about the Tuscanism of Sienese only 57 kilometers (36 miles) away. The Sienese heartily reciprocate the suspicion.

Pisa, Livorno, Florence and the other industrial and commercial cities of the seacoast and Arno Valley have grown prodi-giously sioce World War ff. Maoy foreigners" have flocked to those cities, which consequently are perhaps less Tuscan than they once were.

While the metropolises have changed somewhat, the countryside has remained vir-nually unchanged, probably because the peo-ple who tend the vines, prune and harvest the olives and sow and reap the grain are descendants of the people who were doing the same jobs in the same places 800 years ago.

A manor may be owned by an industrialist from the north or even one of the ancient ooble families, whether survivors of the feudal period, which in Tuscany was rather brief, or scious of bumptious merchants who made a mint in the wool trade and invested their money in land. Their estates, however, are under the daily care of the local contadino ontadini are Tuscans to the core.

Never serfs in the oorthern European sense, they are, in fact, militants who through various forms of coercion secured a compromise with the landlords, the mezzadria system, which was established throughout Tuscany in the early Middle Ages. Under it, the landlord provided the peasants a house and land. The peasants farmed the land and divided the produce of their labors, 50-50, with the owners.

Naturally, each party to the contract did his best to outwit the other. And the dealings could be extremely sharp indeed. While the tussle was often a matter of starvation or survival for the share-cropping peasant, both sides, it seems, came 10 regard the annual divvying of the spoils as a splendid game of wits. Furbo is the falian word for shrewdness, and in the cliché cunning is almost invariably linked with peasant, a clear sign of the general assumption that the contadino usually got the upper hand.

The mezzadria system was finally suppressed in the system was finally suppressed in the system was finally suppressed.

pressed in reforms enacted by the Italian Parliament in the early 1960s. The contadino became a salaried worker and, since estates were often operated on a hit-or-miss basis, many of the owners decided that they could not afford the costs. Thousands of sharecroppers fled the land for the cities, and owners dumped their properties on the mar-ket at absurd prices. Throughout the 1960s and the early 1970s, land could be had in Tuscany for the proverbial song.

New owners with new — at least for Tuscany — ideas appeared and some changes occurred. The most obvious is the system of laying out vineyards. Culture was once promiscuous, with a row of vines, often trained on trees, then olives, then vines, then grain, again vines and, perhaps, another crop.

Now, the vines have been consolidated. The rows are arranged perpendicularly on the slopes, which can be plowed by tracked tractors but oot by the ox teams, which had to move horizontally across the brows of the

The contadino, share-cropper or salaried worker, has changed little, if at all. In fact, the scope of his furbismo has expanded. He now collects an assured wage and he need oot exert himself, although he usually takes pride in his work and does it well, even though, bumper crop or lean, it's all the same to him. And he's in demand. Landlords are finding it increasingly hard to find workers. A house, a bit of land plus a salary with social security benefits must be offered to keep a contadino from becoming a cittadino.

Bot the age-old battle continues. One absentee landlord — a contractor who lives 45 kilometers (28 miles) from his estate — suspected his workers of watering his wine.

He was wild with fury, parily because he takes pride in his wine, but mostly because he was afraid his contadint had outsmarted him, or thought they had. He was more furbo than they, he swore, but he couldn't prove his case. Still, he was sufficiently furbo to pass off the watered wine to his paying clients as the real, unadulterated stuff.

The great stars of the zoo are the gorillas, many of whom have been bred by the trust. They roam around an enclosure about a half acre in size, leaping over boulders, climbing on Jungle Gyms or just hanging out in what seemed to be enormous good humor. We figured about an hour for the zoo, and wound up staying almost all afternoon.

The well-keptness of things on Jersey is striking Mont Organil Castle, which has seen looking out over Grouville Bay since the 13th century, is remarkably preserved, and a fascinating place: I oever had a real dea of what a keep or a portuillis or a nachicolated bastion were before poking round Mont Orgueil. I was a bit disappointed, though, that many of the interesting nanors, small chateau-like residences, were not open to visitors except on special days. So we spent a lot of time with Jersey's World War II history, too interesting to let pass wen if the sun had been out.

Jersey, with the rest of the Channel Isands, was occupied in June 1940 and not iberated until 1945, some 11 months after D-Day. Quixotically, the Germans attemptand to turn Jersey into an enormous fortress and, using slave labor, built a network of gun amplacements and tunnels. Most Jersey resi-lents have a theory on why, and a spectacu-ar one, not all that much based on history, which is that Hitler planned to hole up here. An underground hospital at St. Lawrence are been turned into a museum, and it is an ene place: The juxtaposition against a very against background of the Nazi flags, the sublic notices in German, the photos of the serman commandant's honor guard march-ag in front of Lloyd's Bank Ltd. is discom-

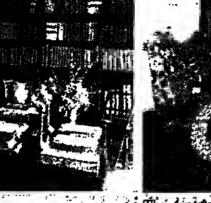

After a morning's look at St. Helier, the capital, we henceforth drove around it. The rest of Jersey is quite lovely enough not to visit St. Helier twice. Through the wind and rain, the beaches at Portelet Bay, Beauport Bay and St. Ouen appeared very attractive. When the sun actually did come out we were on the beach at St. Brelade's Bay, and, after a moment's severe disorientation, agreed it was briefly marvelous.

We lived extremely well, staying at Lon-gueville Manor, a Relais et Châteaux member, and had three different rooms in three nights, all very English; but who really could mind old rose prints, chintz, beated towel rails and luxurious bathtubs?

Eating on Jersey is agreeable. The best meal we had was in a pub called the Fisher-man's Bar beneath the Water's Edge Hotel at Bouley Bay, where the signs say you can go scuba diving nearby. There was first-rate fish soup and very fresh raw seafood. A Paris friend who has a place on Jersey tipped us to the restaurant at the Moorings hotel in Gorey, a village next to Mont Orgueil Castle, and we fared well there, too, sticking to the same basics, a pretty good rule of thumb on the island. Another meal at a rather more ambitious place turned into a Fawlty Towers burlesque with screaming Portuguese waiters and dreadful food. Unfortunately, we ssed the cold lobster at the Jersey Pottery, in Gorey, which another friend describes as

You can get to Jersey by air from London or Paris, as well as from a number of provincial cities in both countries. If you do not rent a car, a bicycle is a must. There are car ferries running from Weymouth and Portsmouth, as well as car ferries and hydrofois. from Saint-Malo and Granville. I have often thought that for a tourist going from France to England, or vice versa, a routing through Jersey would be a slightly exotic yet soothing way of making the transition.

Vienna's Auersperg Palace Sparkles Again

by Alan Levy

TIENNA - The sorrow was great when the Palais Apersperg closed its doors to the general public at the beginning of last year. This Viennese landmark was a place where one could savor a steak tartar or a Chatcaubriand or sip coffee or cocktails beneath palm trees around the fountain of a lush indoor winter parden complete with parrots and a cockatoo named CoCo, who would say "Come bere?" and "Where is the Papa?"

In summer, diners could stroll through a formal outdoor garden, or sit in the same room with Brueghel or Veronese originals istening to Lynn Juliet Englebardt stroking the Steinway with Noel Coward tunes. Moreover, the Auersperg boasted Vienna's cheapest cup of coffee that you could drink sitting down - always well under a dollar making it a haven for students and lovers when its doors opened at 4 P.M.

The good news this summer is that a local entrepreneur, Peter Koller, 40, has rented the Auersperg and is having a ball there almost every night for tourists and occasion-al sentimental Viennese.

His "Viennese Evening in the Palais Auersperg," starts with champagne on the steps of the grand staircase and is followed, in the hall where Mozart once conducted a private performance of his "Idomeneo," with a show (Mozart, Schubert, Stranss, Lehar, and "Edelweiss" from "The Sound of Music") performed by a chamber orchestra, two good opera singers, a ballet quartet dancing the worst choreography in town, and a boys' choir featuring a splendid boy soprano. Then the guests adjourn for a four-course dinner (including trout pâté, an Austrian soup, roast veal and apple strudel) and there is dancing in the music salou and winter

The evenings, which cost 850 Schillings (barely $40) a head, are a new chapter in the palace's checkered but glorious history. De-signed by Johann Bernhard Fisher von Er-lach, the great architect of imperial baroque, in 1721, the palace was built for the original Rosenkavalier," Peter Rofrano, son of the postmaster general for Hapsburg territories n Italy. It was after him that Hugo von Hoffmannsthal modeled the hero of his libretto (changing his first name from Peter to Octavian) for the Richard Strauss opera.

In 1760, the Rosenkavalier's heirs leased the palace to Prince Friedrich Wilhelm voo Sachsen Hildburghausen, whose private orchestra had been conducted by the composer Christoph Willitald von Gluck By then, Gluck was director of the imperial Vienna Opera, but he conducted a memorable series of Hankonzerte here for invited guests only.

In 1777, the palace was sold to Prince Johann Adam Anersperg, a patron of the arts who imported Italian decorators and sculptors to embellish its gardens and interi-or. It was for Anersperg that Mozart adapted bis opera "Idomeneo" into a concert version for amateurs in 1786, with barons and counts singing the leading roles.

The Empress Maria Theresa was always nese is a title, and in 1965, the Auersperg's fond of Auersperg's rose garden, and her husband, the wayward Holy Roman Emperor Franz I, was especially fond of one of the Auersperg princesses. At Franz's funeral when the Princess Auersperg appeared, weeping, most of the mourners scorned her, but the empress left her family and came over to comfort the princess, saying: "We have truly lost much, my dear." After the funeral, the princess presented a oote Franz had given her for 200,000 guilders (three times the value of the Aucrsperg at the time). The royal treasurer refused it, but the empress ordered it paid in full.

The Henry Kissinger of the Hapsburg era. Prince Clemens Wenzel Nepomuk Lothar von Metternich, favored the Auersperg, too. During the Congress of Vienna in 1814-15, if any high officials oceded to meet in privacy, Metternich would send them to a salon of the Auersperg "warmed" by two ceramic stoves. Only one stove, however, was in working order. The other was hollowed out and inside sat Metternich's spy, taking notes. In the 1850s, the palace underwent a three-year renovation and, at the celebration of its reopening on April 13, 1856, Emperor Franz Joseph, then 26, and his 19-year-old Empress Elisabeth waltzed here all night to the music of Johann Strauss.

In 1862, the street on which the palace stands was re-named Auerspergstrasse in honor of Prince Adolf Auersperg, who later became Austrian prime minister.

HE palace's Mozartean tradition of amateur theatricals was perpetuated by Princess Pauline Metternich, the statesman's granddaughter. One of her actors, a few years before his tragic death at Mayerling, was Crown Prince Rudolf, a col-lection of whose childhood uniforms and lederhosen are kept in the library adjoining the winter garden.

When the empire collapsed after World War I, much of the Auersperg was converted to office space, and in World War II, it became the headquarters of the Austrian resistance to Hitler. "It was so big and imposing," one old hero recalls, "that the Gentleman the state of the Austrian resistance to Hitler." stapo never thought of looking for the underground here." In April 1945, the Austrian Republic was proclaimed here, with the hoisting of the red-white-red flag. A tablet in German at the main entrance reads: "Austrian patriots gathered in this house prevented the destruction of Vienna and laid the coruerstone of a free Austria."

At the outset of the occupation of Austria by the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union, the Auersperg was Inter-Al-lied Military Police Headquarters and figured in the film "Four in a Jeep." Later in that seedy decade, much of the palace was abandoned, its salons preserved as salesrooms and a circus pitched its tent in the formal gardens.

In the 1950s, the palace was bought by Alfred Weiss, a coffce magnate, who commissioned the architect Oswald Haerdtl to restore it and made it an elegant showcase for his Arabia coffee - which explains why the price per cup was always so low.

The greatest honor you can give a Vien-

owner became Consul Weiss. His coffee, despite its name, came from El Salvador, and for more than a decade, the Auersperg sported the seal of Salvadoran Consulate, the only place in town with consular hours from 4 to 6 P.M. Businessmen balanced briefcases on laps at little white cocktail tables in the winter garden while nervously choosing between coffice and champagne, whichever they thought would further their causes. In Consul Weiss' declining years, the docu-ments were ratified by his Yugoslav headwaiter, who kept the official ribbons and seals with the credit card machines.

Weiss died in 1976. His grandson, Andrew Demmer, uneasy about the Salvadoran connection, divested the family first of the consulate and then of coffee, selling Arabia to Julius Meinl and opening his own Demmer's Technus a few blocks away. Maintaining the palace for a public that sometimes stayed for hours on one cup of coffce became so costly that, at the end of 1982, Demmer decided to keep it open only for balls, banquets, jubilees

Then, last spring, the American-educated Koller, went to an Austro-Arab Society banquet at the Auersperg and decided "it was crying shame that the palace was dark most of the time." A distant descendant of Johann Strauss and specialist in export-import marketing, Koller organized the program and lined up the talent in May.

With virtually oo publicity, it took a while for the world to find out about his elegant mousetrap. Koller would like to run it longer, but he admits the money is running out. The city of Vienna has sponsored us verbal-y," he says, "we hope it will help us financially too."

"Viennese Evening at the Auersperg," continues nightly through Sept. 9 (except on Aug. 19 and 31. Sept. 3 and 6); for the rest of September it runs every Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. For information, call. Palais Auersperg, Averspergstrasse 1, A-1080 Vienna; tel: 43.15.68.

GM Proposes Trim In Its Health Plan

By James Risen

Les Angeles Times Service

DETROIT — After three weeks of uneventful bargaining dominated more by public posturing than by real progress on the issues, General Motors Corp. and the United Anto Workers union have gotten down to their first substantive negotiations of this year's autocontract talks as GM proposed a plan designed to slash the company's health-care costs by as much as 10 percent.

to slash the company's health-care costs by as much as 10 percent.

UAW officials said they were generally pleased with the proposal GM made Wednesday. The response was seen as an indication that the union might altempt to use the GM approach as a pattern for health-care plans throughout the U.S. auto industry.

Employee health insurance has become one of the fastest-growing costs facing major corporations, experielly companies with large num-rations, especially companies with large numbers of workers covered by union contracts. Auto industry executives, most notably Chrysler Corp.'s chairman, Lee A. Iacocca, have repeatedly warned that corporate health care costs have gotten out of control and are threatening to make U.S. companies less competitive with their foreign rivals.

GM, which is believed to have the largest noogovernmental health-care program in the Uosted States, covering 2.1 million people, said the $2.2-billion total cost of its existing, fully paid health care plans for hourly and salaried workers adds $430 to the price of the average

Alfred S. Warren Jr., GM's vice president for industrial relations and its chief negotiator, said at a press conference Wednesday that GM's health-insurance costs have risen 15 percent each year for the last 10 years, and he noted that abuses have become common under GM's cur-

He cited the case of one worker who spent a full year in a bospital, at a cost to GM of $500,000, when the worker did not need lengthy

GM presented a complex proposal to the union that would allow workers to choose one of three health-care plans. They would be able to participate in an existing bealth maintenance organization; a second plan that would include extra coverage and set up a network of designated health-care professionals who would receive patients covered by GM only if they met certain cost targets, or a modified version of GM's traditional plan that would require authorization before employees could receive many ma-jor health services.

GM bargainers conceded that the third option would require the company to set up a big new bureaucracy to review the 40 million medical claims paid by the company each year.

However, none of the new programs would on their health insurance premiums or to pay deductibles on their medical bills. As recently as the 1982 contract talks, GM tried insuccessfully to get the union to agree to make workers share in the cost of their health-care coverage to reduce the use and abuse of the fully paid

A UAW vice president, Donald Ephlin, the mnion's chief bargainer, said at a press conference that GM's proposal was "responsive," and "goes to the heart of the problem" of abuses of medical plans by health professionals. He added, however, that the UAW will demand that safeguards be included in any new health programs to protect workers from having to pay their own bills because physicians or hospitals fail to meet GM's cost targets.

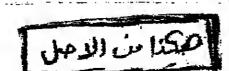

Despite the apparent progress on health care, however, the two sides have not begun to discuss the two issues expected to dominate the talks when bargaining intensifies—joh security and wages. After the talks opened on July 23, GM and the UAW spent the first three weeks of negotiations sparring in public and private about the state of the industry without getting down to specific proposals on wage increases or the auto talks is likely to accelerate in the next two weeks. At GM, 11 joint subcommittees have just begun to deal with nonwage issues, and Mr. Warren said GM could make an eco-nomic offer to the UAW as early as next week.

Progress in Self-Navigation Boosting Personal Robots

. By STUART DIAMOND

EW YORK — At Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, James L. Crowley has taught a small robot to navigate by itself through rooms and ballways of his laboratory complex. He first walked it once around the location of file cabinets, tables, chairs, water fountains and other chiects.

Then, with simple keyboard commands from Mr. Crowley such as "Go to the drinking fountain in the hallway," the robot navigated by itself, wheeling around obstacles. It could do the same in a living room, kitchen and other parts of a house, he said. We think of it as a little pet," Mr. Crowley, director of the household-robotics laboratory, said of Intelligent Mobile Platform, which is 3 feet (90 centimeters) tall and weighs 30 counds (13.5 kilograms).

The robot's self-navigating technique, developed over the ast year, is a breakthrough in robot technology and prom-uses to be a big boost for the personal-robot market. Until ... now, robots could be pro-

But for many new robot companies,

"They couldn't do any planning based on the current state of the environment," Mr. Crowley said. "If the robot was pointed ust a little at the wrong angle to start, it could stop at a wall astead of going through a door."

The new navigation system, experts say, will enable the robot to do useful work around the house - from rudimentary tasks such as sentry duty and vacuum cleaning next year to more complex work such as toilet and window cleaning later this

Mr. Crowley and others have already developed methods to mable robots to perform tasks based on spoken commands and tre working on improved "vision" techniques that would enable ohots to pick up a particular object on a table.

These developments are the latest in a mushrooming industry If personal robots that promises to create a second generation of tousehold belpers. A study released late last month by Internaional Resource Development Inc., a Norwalk, Connecticut, narket-research company, said that 175 companies are involved n some aspect of personal-robot production and sales: for tomes, schools, hobbyists and the handicapped.

ales will total $51 million this year but the market will reach $2.4 billion by 1994, the study said. Within that, the so-called domestic slave market for household robots, totaling 300,000 this year, will reach $425 million in a decade, the company said.

"We've spent a lot of time automating the factory and the office; we are starting to see a major trend in using some of that echnology to make life easier at home," said Michael N. Forino, president of Hubotics Inc., a company based in Carlsbad, Caliornia, which says it has taken orders in the last year from such major department stores as Abraham & Straus and Bamberger's or 450 of its Hubot robots, valued at $1.1 million.

By the end of the year, the Hubot will be able to patrol a bome, letect smoke and call for help, vacuum on a voice command, turn on a television and operate household appliances. It will not have the ability to self-navigate until next year, so its practicality will

Until 1981, nearly all commercially available robots were little more than mechanical arms used in factories. Most cost tens of thousands of dollars. The recent personal-robot market stems around in a confined space without bumping into things

The first generation of personal robots cost $1,000 to $3,000. Most can be programmed to talk, but they cannot bear. They follow instructions from a keyboard or programming buttons on the unit. They have sonar, infrared and other devices to detect and avoid objects but they can only follow a set path. Most are wheeled, boxlike or cylindrical objects. Some have mechanical

Philips Says Net Rose 91%

2d-Quarter Gain Met Expectation

AMSTERDAM — Philips NV said Thursday that strong growth in all divisions, especially industrial-electronics supplies, helped its profit surge 91 percent in the second guester from a west endies. ond quarter from a year earlier.

The company said it earned 262 million guilders ($82 million) in the quarter, up from 137 million guilders in the second quarter of 1983. Revenue rose 15 percent to 12.14 billion guilders from 10.54 billion guilders a year earlier.

Philips said the results meant that profit and revenue for the year should he in line with expectations. In March, the company predicted growth in net profit of 55 percent and sales growth of 8 percent for

The company said it had strong sales of all products, with the biggest gains coming in industrial supplies, notably integrated circuits, discrete semiconductors and color picture tubes. Lighting and batter-ies also showed a substantial sales ncrease, the company said.

Difficulties in the sound- and image-equipment market led to slow sales growth in the home-electronics sector, Philips said.

Sales increased strongly in the United States and Canada, reflecting economic growth as well as the high dollar exchange rate, the company said. It said Asian sales rose sbarply while European sales lagged because of depressed consumer spending, Philips added, Horst Dassler with a portrait of his father; Adidas factory in West Germany.

Adidas Is in Training to Run Faster On the Crowded Track of Fashion

By Warren Getler

HERZOGENAURACH, West Germany -Looking relaxed and tanned after two weeks under the Los Angeles sun. Horst Dassler returned to Adidas Co. headquarters here last Sunday confident that his company, the world's largest maker of sporting goods, had won big at the Olympic Games.

But while the company is proud of its identification with sports, it is moving to put more emphasis on fashion products — in a diversification move that may contain some risks

"Last week's Olympics drew more people to their TV sets than any event since the last soccer World Cup. When you consider that the majority of the competitors and medal winners were Adidas shoes and uniforms with our unmistakeable three-stripe trademark, you know such visibility can only help sales," said Mr. Dassler, 47, who last year assumed day-to-day management control as vice chairman of the family-owned company. The company, founded in 1948 by Horst Dassler's father, Adolf or "Adi" Dassler, is run by the Adolf and Kathe Dassler Foundation. Kathe Dassler, Adolph's widow, is chairman of the foundation, and Horst Dassler and his four sisters make up the foundation's board along with Mrs.

The worldwide exposure given the Adidas label by the Olympics came as the company's sales have slowed from record growth of 30 to 40 percent a year in the late 1970s to less than 10 percent. This slowing is largely attributed to the difficulty of maintaining such a fast pace, and to stiffer compe-titioo in a stagnating market for athletic footwear.

Despite the less optimistic outlook for Adidas's strongest product line, lightweight sports shoes, Mr. Dassler said his company remained "highly profitable."

As a privately owned company, Adidas is not obliged to provide most financial data. In a rare hint at company profitability, Mr. Dassler said, "Our profitability [profit margin] is about double the average figure among our competitors, based on what I know about profits at Nike Co. of America, Japan's Mizuno and Asics companies, all three of which are public, as well as at Puma, which is owned and run privately from Herzogenaurach

NEW YORK — The dollar rebounded in New York Thursday, in anticipation of a rise in the U.S. money supply. And it got a small boost from the Treasury's decision not to restrict sales of stripped securities

"The dollar moved down very sharply indeed from its high levels early this week," said Ron Liesching, economist at Chase Manhattan Bank. "We're now having a consolidation of that move and if money supply is up as expected the current levels could hold."

In late trading in New York Thursday, the British pound de-clined to $1,3245 from $1,3288 on Wednesday. The dollar rose against the French franc to 8.7720 from 8.7490; against the Deutsche mark it rose to 2.862 from 2.8508, and against the yen it moved up to 241.325 from 240.275.

Plessey Says Net Rose 10%

By Lynne Curry LONDON - The telecommunications and electronics group Plessey Co. reported Thursday a 10percent increase in pretax profit for its fiscal first quarter compared with the 1983 first quarter. £38.2 million in the first quarter last year, helped by improvements ceived, and strong overall in the microelectronics and aerospace divisions. Volume for the 1983's record earnings. The space divisions. Volume for the first quarter was £305.23 million, up 5.9 percent from a year earlier. The results were "a touch below market estimates," said Richard Reacting to the results, Plessey shares fell to 206 pence on the Lon-don Stock Exchange after opening at 212 pence. The price recovered slightly to close at 207 pence.

Budgett, an analyst at W. Green-

Analysts said the market was responding to modest results in the telecommunications and electronic systems divisions. The telecom-munications sector's profit in the first quarter was £14.91 million, against £14.47 million a year earli-er. During the quarter Plessey had a six-week strike at its main plant in Liverpool, which analysts said resulted in a loss of £1 million to £2 million in profits.

The electronie systems and equipment division, which handles military orders, recorded a £9.01million profit, up 6.5 percent.

Analysts called this a modest increase compared with the first quarter of 1983. They noted, however, that the figure was distorted by the fact that Plessey's contracts tend to be completed in batches and that a disproportionate num-ber of them fall later in the year.

Gains Made In Robotics

(Continued from Page 11) Zenith Radio Corp. of Benton Harbor, Michigan: RB Robot Corp. of Golden, Colorado, and Androbot Inc. of San Jose, California. The International Resource study said the three would account for 91 percent of the 11,500 personal robots shipped this year. Besides Huboties, other companies in the new market are Roboties International Corp. of Jackson, Michigan, and Personal Robot Corp. of San Jose.

A major problem faced by many new robot companies is that development costs dwarf sales. Some companies cannot afford to produce all the robots they have sold or incorporate the new technology needed to spur higher sales. RB Robot, for example, is now in reorpanization under Chapter 11 of the J.S. Bankrupicy Code and has had o postpone development of a selftavigating system because of costs, and Joseph H. Bosworth, the company's president. Huhorics has hipped only 35 of its 450 orders or the $3,495 robot because it does tot have enough money to buy all he necessary materials at one time.

One robot company using the newest technology is Denning Mo-tile Robots Inc. of Woburn, Masachusetts, It is working with Mr. rowley to incorporate the selfavigation system in a $30,000-to-40,000 sentry robot for sale startng next June. It has a contract to upply 1,000 of them to Southern teel Corp., a major maker of prisn-security equipment in San Anmio, Texas, It is talking to superrarkets about using the 300-pound abot for floor washing. "Someone 1 Beverly Hills wants one for secuty around his mansion," said a tenning vice president. Benjamin Wellington.

Mr. Crowley said it would take 5 years to develop fully integrated omestic serfs. Meanwhile he said. rany people will be startled in the ext few years to see $5,000 robots acuuming airport lobbies or mow g the neighbor's lawn.

THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTIONS OF 1917: The Origins of Modern Communism.

By Leonard Schapiro. 239 pp. $19.95. Basic Books, 10 East 53d St., New York, N.Y. 1022.

Reviewed by John Erickson.

I N his earlier, magisterial "The Origin of the Communist Autocracy," first published by Harvard University Press in 1955, the late and much lamented Professor Leonard Schapuro of the London School of Economics craved the gentlest indulgence for not having written a history of the Russian Revolution in the course of examining the fate of Lenin's opponents after 1917, an opposition whose struggle for sheer survival had nothing in common with the urbane niceties of Western political practice.

No such reproof was ever forthcoming and if this was the barest hint of self-reproach, then all and any grounds for it have been brilliantly and conclusively demolished with the appearance of the present volume. "The Russian Revolutions of 1917," the distillation of many years of research, reflection and recollection the last flickering through Schapiro's closing note in which he referred to himself as one of the diminishing number of surviving contem-poraries outside Russia who lived through this turmoil.

Schapiro's first aim — to provide a concise narrative of events from 1917 to 1924, closing with the death of Lenin — has been amply fulfilled. The last comprehensive history of the Russian revolutions of February and October. Russian revolutions of reordary and October, 1917, made its appearance as long ago as 1935 with W. H. Chamberlin's two-volume work, but since then the Cold War with its varying degrees of intensity has intruded on all and sundry. The hazards this presents for the historian was a theme Schapiro illuminated in his study of political opposition in the Soviet state. 1917-1921, making it clear that he would not underside of the state concessions in his effort to and could not make concessions in his effort to probe those assertions made by the Communists about themselves (and that assortment of claims made both by their protagonists and by their detractors).

"The Russian Revolutions of 1917" is thus oo sour, vindictive, polemical work. On the contrary, it has a certain luminosity born of a contrary, it has a certain humanosity born of a clear and elegant style, also informed by the Buthor's personal recollection of turnultuous events propelling life towards some great future with the promise of much that was new and hopeful. But something went horribly, even terribly, wrong, and it is this development or denouement which Schapino addresses in detail, of how the February revolution for all its mass support fizzied out, inwilling or inits mass support fizzled out, unwilling or un-able to recognize — much less counter — the threat posed by the Bolshevik quest for power, where success at Lenin's single-minded behest implanted the "hereditas damnosa" of the iron rule of one party ranged against all others and the Bolshevik countin October takes up at least half the book. His analysis makes use of much new material to chart the decline and demise of the Provisional. Government, a government which in any event lacked a legitimate basis for its existence from the outset. There is much which is new or newly clarified to the behavior which is new of newly character to the behavior of Mikhail Rodzyanko during the abdication phase itself, the myths and mysteries surrounding the Lavi Georgyevich Kornilov affair, the upshot of which was to strengthen the hand of the Bolsheviks, with the right and the left distrustful of or alienated from Kerensky Supporters of the Bolsheviks may have inclined towards a rough democratic system provided by the socialist soviets but at this juncture Lenin abandoned the notion of any peaceful development of the Russian Revolution, turned his back on the idea of a transfer of power to the soviets and contemplated the passage of power to the proletariat — a formulation leading in a quite draconian direction, towards one-party autocracy.

The trick, if anything so momentous as the Bolshevik coup can be so described, was nextness itself and introduced an entirely new phenomenon into modern politics. Popular aspiranomenon into modern pointes. Popular aspira-tion, leaning, towards the idea of a socialist condition, would have had the soviets take over from a government which simply could not govern, a sentiment duly encouraged and nur-tured by the Bolsheviks, who then proceeded to elbow the soviets aside in favor of the monopolistic rule of the party.

It is here that Schapiro's narrative really comes into its own, for his book is essentially about power, how the Bolsheviks not only acquired it but how they maintained their grip on it, with much interesting material on the Bolshevik penetration of the Russian army and the spread of Bolshevik power beyond Petro-

When such popular support as the Bolshe-viks enjoyed began to erode and those who thought Bolshevik extremism only a passing phase soon to burn fiself out had to face reality, when peace did not materialize and bread vanished for all the plethors of promises and undertakings, then the machinery of the party was worked (as it continues to be worked) not only to preserve the hold on power but also to assure an unassailable monopoly of that same power. And, finally, it was the very exploitation of the Leminist system of Commu-nist control which brought Stalin his ultimate mastery, though Schapiro is judiciously re-strained in making too arbitrary a connection.

He wastes little time in trying to assess who won and who lost, but to judge from the weight and the tone of this superbly penetrating volume, which eachews all violence of language or vehemence of argument, the real losers were the Russian people themselves. It is a judgment which, like the book itself, is likely to stand for a very long time.

John Erickson, director of defense studies at the University of Edinburgh, is the author of "The Road to Stalingrad: Stalin's War With Germany" and "The Road to Berlin: Continuing the History of Stalin's War With Germany." He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

South who should perhaps South did the best he could by ruffing the diamond jack called, was in three spades and with the triump queen. West many trumps are certainly wrong.

West had this sort of problem on the diagramed deal.

South who should perhaps South did the best he could by ruffing the diamond jack with the triump queen. West made a brilliant move by under the first life of the South did the best he could the diamond ace. South spade ten would eventually the diamond continua-bave provided South with his a ninth trick.

When the declarer exited with a club, East correctly overtook the ten with the jack and led a diamond, South discarded a club, and West has a like to the south discarded a club, and west ruffed. It did not matter ruffed. East was sure to score a club trick and West a trump trick to defeat the contract.

This was good defense:
West had recognized that he was too wealthy in trumps, and successfully gave some away.

LOS ANGELES - Two Olympic women athletes have written a public letter to Zola Budd, urging her to "learn, grow and benefit" from her collision with the U.S. runner Mary Decker during the Olympic 3,000-meter track race.

The letter, written by Kate Schmidt, an American javelin thrower, and Debbie Brill, a Canadian high jumper, was printed Thursday in the Los Angeles Times, It also criticized Decker for "ungraciousness" in her reaction to be collision.

Budd, Ig, is a native South African who took British citizenship to enable her to compete in the Olympics. She was roundly booed by the Los Angeles Coliseum crowd after she and Decker collided, Decker fell, was injured and had to leave the race. She later blamed Budd for the mishap, although officials ab-solved ber of fault. Budd suffered cuts on her leg and heel, finishing seventa in the race.

The letter reads: "Some of us have observed and some have experienced the joy and have so many years ahead to train bility to apologize for anyone, we imagine the emotional pain one infinite. suffers from the denial of our passions at such a level, whether it's Mary Decker's lack of gracious-due to injury, or illness, or a tragic ness, for the otherwise polite Coliaccident, such as the one you sul- seum erowd booing, while it was fered through in Los Angeles.

He said that he could reach each of the par-5 holes in two shots if he drove in the fairways. J.C. Snead did not seem as enthusiastie. "Sure, there's a premium on driving here." he explained. But when you are on the tee of one of the fine old traditional courses. you are given a picture shot to play. You can have a plan. The architects of today have gotten away from that. Now on the tee, I see nothing here. Nothing fits to set up the tee shot for me. There are no lines to define the tee shot, no definition. These fairways are snakelike. They zigzag and give you no picture to course but a very good one. And it's not the design that will make a success of the PGA Championship.

Paraguayan Upsets Lendl in Canada

TORONTO (AP) — Francisco Gonzalez of Paraguay used his powerful serve to upset top-seeded Ivan Lendl in the second round of the Canadian Open tennis tournament Wednesday. He blasted seven aces while defeating the defending champion from Czechoslovakia. 7-6, 6-4, "I'm a very happy person right now," said Gonzalez, ranked 91st in the world. "It's my best result since I beat Connors." He was referring to a 6-. 7-6 triumph last year in Cincinnati.

Lendl said: "I was disgusted with myself. But what can you do? It doesn't do anything to my confidence. It's nicer to win, but if you were tired and needed the rest, then you just have to keep practicing and hope

Baseball Owners Approve Twins' Sale

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Major-league baseball owners have unanimously approved the sale of the Minnesota Twins to Carl Pohlad, a Minneapolis banking executive. Pohlad purchased Calvin Griffith's 52-percent share of the Twins for an estimated $32 million and bought another 42 percent of the club's stock from H. Gabriel Murpby through the Tampa Bay Baseball Group, a group of businessmen who agreed to sell the shares they had purchased from Murphy for a reported $11.5 million in April,

"The Tampa Bay group cooperated 100 percent in the effort to keep the Minnesota Twins in Minnesota," Pohlad said. "Certainly, they bave the best interest of baseball at heart."

Sandy Hadden, secretary-treasurer and general counsel of major league baseball, said that Commissioner Bowie Kuhn had commended the Tampa Bay group for its cooperation and "suggested that all concerned remember that in the future." Asked if this helped Tampa's effort to win an expansion team. Hadden replied "You might call it a brownie point."

Tigers Ex-Owner Honored by Peers

Feizer, 83, owned the Tigers from 1961 to 1983, when he sold them to Tom Monaghan. He agreed to remain as chairman of the American League club's three-man board of directors for at least three years.

"Baseball has been my life," Fetzer said Wednesday on receiving the trophy, awarded periodically in recognition of baseball excellence. "This award is to be cherished because it was done by my peers in baseball. It is an overwhelming honor, enormous."

Royals Sign Dent as Backup Shortstop KANSAS CITY (AP) - The Kansas City Royals have signed shortstop Bucky Dent to a free-agent contract. Dent was signed after Royals backup shortstop U.L. Washington followed starter Onix Concepcion onto the disabled list. Dent, who was to report to Texas where the Royals opened a three-game series Thursday, will serve as a backup shortstop, said Dick Howser, the manager.

A .247 hitter in 10 major league seasons, Dent was released by the Texas Rangers April 9. He had signed a minor league contract with the New York Yankees and hit .259 in 16 games at Columbus before he was

Nordiques Sign Swedish Defenseman

QUEBEC (UPI) - The Quebec Nordiques have signed Roger Haegglund, a defenseman from Sweden. The National Hockey League team obtained the rights to the 23-year-old player earlier this year in a cash deal with the St. Louis Blues, who picked Haegglund as their sixth choice in the 1980 amateur draft.

The Nordique's chief scout, Martin Madden, said Haegglund, the second Swede on the squad after Bo Berglund, would be a big asset. "Haegglund is very mobile," Madden noted, "He's a fast skater and handles the puck well."

ASU as No. 1? Don't Tell the Coach

TEMPE, Arizona (AP) - Darryl Rogers, the Arizona State University football coach, is surprised that some national publications have put his Sun Devils atop their preseason football polis.

"It's amazing to me how we can be picked No. 1 in the nation by some people and No. 5 in the conference by others." Rogers said. "We're pretty much the same team we were last year. Now all of a sudden we're real

Last season, after a 4-0-1 start, Arizona State finished 6-4-1 and 3-3-1 in the Pacific-10 Conference — squandering its chance at a Rose Bowl berth for the second straight season.

9 Pacer Veterans Attend Early Camp

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - Their attendance is not mandatory, but nine Indiana Pacer veterans showed up for the National Basketball Association team's rookie-free agent camp this week. Clark Kellogg, Steve Supanovich, Kevin McKenna, Sidney Lowe, Jim Thomas, Leroy Combs. Brook Steppe, Granville Waiters and Russ Schoene joined 12 other players already in camp.

George Irvine, the Pacers' coach, was not complaining. "I'm pleased to see so many of them here." be said. "It's good to see that type of commitment. They didn't have to be here."

Italian Track Star Triumphs at Home

VIAREGGIO, Italy (UPI) - Pietro Mennea of Italy, the world record holder in the 200 meters who was shut out of the medals at Los Angeles in his fourth successive Olympics, returned to winning ways Wednesday with a victory at an international track and field meet here. Mennea, 32, who has not ruled out competing in the 1988 Olympic Games at Seoul, clocked 20.48 seconds and stayed a full two paces ahead of second-place Jacques Boussemart of France. He set a record of 19.72

A capacity crowd of 15.000 drowned Mennes in cheers as he sprinted 10 victory. He finished seventh in the Olympic 200 meters final last week. The popular Italian's performance highlighted a meet deprived of many of the expected stars because of canceled flights.

Tuning Out Jokesters

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Except when Myron Cohen is telling them. jokes bore me stiff. You are not supposed to admit something like this because it is thought to be evidence that you have no sense of humor, and in the United States it is considered disgraceful to lack a sense of humor. Don't ask me why.

Anyhow, whatever you want to make of it, jokes bore me stiff. Yet how can you hurt people like Kullmer when he braces you in a crowded room and asks, as he asked me in a crowded room recently, "Have you heard the one about the three guerrillas that go into a saloon?"

I said, "No, I haven't heard it." which is how I always answer this question. Since I forget jokes the instant after bearing them, I honestly think I haven't heard them until they begin to unfold. When Kullmer's began to unfold I realized I had heard it before. It's the one that begins, "Three guerril-las walk into a saloon and the first guerrilla says. 'I'll have a martini with an anchovy in it --- '

You've probably heard it, too, so you know how long it takes to tell it. When Kullmer began to relate it.

I had two choices.
One, I could say, "Never mind, Kullmer, I've heard that one already." Or, two, I could pretend I hadn't heard it and try to hang spellbound on every word through the next five minutes, then try to explode with bogus laughter when he finally reached the punch line.

I chose the second course of action, exhausting though it was. Kullmer is a generous man who once lent me $25.

Choosing to listen all the way to the punch line in this situation always take a heavy toll. Though profoundly bored, you have to contort the facial muscles into a painful rictus - a wretched imitation of an anticipatory smile - then be prepared to snort and howl with glee the instant the jokester hits the punch line.

It isn't easy howling with false glee after the facial muscles have been rigidly frozen for five minutes in a phony smile.

What's more, by the time Kullmer was saying, "And the sec-ood guerrilla says, "I'll have a mar-tini with a twist of herring'" I had recalled the punch line ("What do you think I am? A baboon?") and realized the joke still had four and a half more minutes to run. Maintaining the painful fake smile, I shut out the sound of Kullmer's voice and scanned the room for interesting people. Who should be smiling across that crowded room but Ezekiel Dillon, a man so powerful in corporate America, as he told me one night after his third martini (with a twist of olive, hold the pimento), that he could make or break me simply by raising an eyebrow in the right boardrooms.

Knowing Dillon 10 be a merciless joke-teller, I resolved to escape the room before he could reach me, hut Kullmer had been so encouraged by the fixity of my smile that he had seized my arm and held me restrained as the three-guerrilla joke rolled ceaselessly on. When he finally hit the punch line. I ordered up the old howl of glee. Nothing came out. The anticipatory smile frozen on my face had become so rigid that it was impossible to get the lips closed over my I was facially immobilized in this

Dillon beckoned me to him. Of course I went. I wanted on evebrows raised in American board-

helpless condition when Ezekiel

"Are your teeth bothering you?" "Not at all." I grinned in helplessly anticipatory delight.

"You ought to see a dentist," said Dillon. "Which reminds me Have you heard the one about the three guerrillas that go to the dentist and the first guerrilla says -?"

As Dillon hit the punch line ("I'm a dentist, not an anchovy") my frozen smile muscles went into spasms, producing a howl of pain, which Dillon fortunately interpreted as a howi of glee.

In the emergency ward the doc-tor, who claimed he could make my face feel like new, said, "Have you heard the one about —?"

"Jokes bore me stiff," I cried, and instantly regretted it. My gov-ernment dossier doubtless contains a doctor's warning: "Probable Se-curity Risk: Has No Sense of Hu-

'The Terrible Secrecy'

A Playwright Probes Her Painful Memories: 'No One Wants to Talk About Incest and Sexual Abuse

By Herman Wong

Los Angeles Times Service NEW YORK — Michelle Morris remained silent, keeping her emotions to herself. The only clues showed in her eyes: pained, peculiarly calm, seeming to see and remember too much.

The playwright wanted to confront the memories in private. It would be three more days before her play would preview at the small, off-Broadway, Perry Street Theater. But she wanted to see the set without actors and audiences.

Near the gallows-like scaffolding, past the catwalks that flanked the set, she stopped to stare at the main props for her play, "Carla's Song," which opened in late July to lukewarm reviews. There was a red rose on a bench, a dinner table set for two, and an overstuffed chair where the father in the play would sit fondling his teen-age daughter before he took her upstairs to his bed.

A little later, in a Greenwich Village cafe a few blocks away, Morris was a different woman - vivacious, talking rapidly, at times with the awe of someone who has made it to New York with her first play.
"No one wants to talk about incest and sexual ahuse," she said. "They don't dare face the truth; the truth is too horrendous and closer to home than they want to believe. The taboo is not that it's happening. Yes, even in the best of homes. The taboo is that the victims aren't supposed to talk about it." The play is Morris's attempt to help break the silence. "Of course the play is a form of catharsis for me, for a lot of other people." Morris, 42, was sexually abused as a teen-age girl. Unlike the Carla Hughes of the play, ch is based on her 1982 novel, "If I Should Die Before 1 Wake," Morris wasn't a victim of incest. But she said she had suffered a similar pattern of self-destructiveness and sexual servitude and from feelings that abusive attitudes by men were the norm of soci-

"I didn't want to go public about my own experience. I figured, Why risk the public exposure?" My life has been calm now for years." She was divorced in her 20s and has been married for 10 years to Larry Kerin, a businessman. "No one but my family and Larry knew, oot even my therapists." A touch of anger showed.

"But that is the problem, the terrible secrecy. How could I tell others to speak ont? How could I hide any longer?"

Many people still consider incest unfit for discussion in polite company. "But here we are, doing this play, this subject." Morris said. "Tell me, are we crazy?"

Lane, best known for showcasing gay-orient-ed works, presented the original off-Broadway production of Harvey Fierstein's "Torch Song Trilogy," which won a Tony Award. Friends referred the Morris work to them.

We felt it could be made stageworthy for New York," Glines said. "The original play was too rudimentary; we felt we should go back to the book. It's strong drama but, frankly, a subject that's not exactly in theatrical vogue."

After more than three weeks of previews; 'Carla's Song" opened July 25, but only ran for two weeks.

The morning after the first preview performance, sitting in a sunlit den in her Brooklyn Heights apartment, Morris reflected, "It's not as bad for me anymore. I'm older, I've had the chance to cope with it longer. But the feelings never really go away."

Her childhood in Los Angeles, she said, was emotionally tumultuous. "Let's just say I was real incorrigible at school, my self-esteem just didn't exist, I had a lot of self-destructiveness in me then."

The awareness of sexual abuse came later. I got this job to sit for four little kids in the same working-class neighborhood. I was

"Their father - I had never met him came by to drive me over. He started to pay me weird compliments. Then in the house he undressed himself, telling me all sorts of kinky things to do to him.

"I couldn't move, I couldn't talk, I was like stame. And I wouldn't do what he asked. He got mad, then he tried to sweet-talk me. He brought down his 4-year-old son, and right in front of me, he molested that kid. "I didn't try to run away. He was a big. heavy man. He stood there swearing at me, telling me what he'd do to me if I didn't comply. It was like having a gun pointed at

"He let me go, drove me home, telling me what be'd do if I ever told anyone. I told my sister the next day. I swore her to secrecy. She told my mother." No one else was told for nearly 20 years.

"It was like Carla, the otter shame, the terrible confusion. I didn't see myself as the victim; I didn't for all those years. I thought it was me. I thought I was the weird, shameful human being. I was the one who had to hide. "And he was like Jay Hughes [Carla's fa-ther]. To him, little girls liked it. It's still the ruling sexual absurdity in our patriarchal society. The children are the evil ones, the tiny seducers, the vamps.

Frend, no less, said this, just about everyone else believed it, that the children were just Her producers, John Glines and Lawrence fantasizing and how can these parents - so ster."

Morris gave a small, mocking smile: "I had always said I was lucky. I lived through that ordeal, I was not maimed, physically. Mentally, that was something else."

The emotional traumas were many, as if she had become Caria Hughes as an adult. "I went with men who tended to be violent, to be abusive. My own sexuality was non-existent. I was so dysfunctional as a person, felt so useless. My first marriage failed. But I didn't think anything was especially wrong. didn't understand then."

By 1980, when she left social work in Los Angeles for full-time writing, Morris decided to write a story of sexual abuse; the one about Carla Hughes.

"I had to rewrite the play from scratch, holed up for nearly six months," Morris said. We've clarified the father, making him more human, more understandable, less a mon-
